LYNDEN, WASH., JUNE 19, 1890.

SENATOR LELAND STANFORD is described in a Washington despatch of the 10th inst. to be stark mad upon the question of the presidency.

The despatch states that Stanford paid a New York advertiser $50,000 for his great land mortgage bill which was recently introduced into the senate by the millionaire senator.

The fact that any man would adopt and introduce such loose and practically insane financial measures is prima facie evidence that he is insane.

Stanford is represented as having fallen into the hands of a lot of schemers in Washington and New York, who are reported to have bled him freely.

It is known that the California senator has paid large sums to spiritualist mediums for tips relating both to present operations and future fortunes; and this fact added to the land mortgage bill, of which he is the reputed father, justifies almost any absurd story concerning him. — Seattle Press.

An attorney in Tacoma sued a banker for services rendered by the plaintiff in introducing the banker into society.

The jury gave the attorney a judgment for one hundred dollars and costs, all he asked. Bankers don't always have it their own way.

CHEHALIS gets the state reform school.

It will be located about half a mile from the city on a fifty acre tract, for which $50,000 is to be paid. Work is to commence at once.

MARY ANDERSON was married last Tuesday to Navarro, of New York.

The ceremony took place at Bromont oratory in London and was performed by Cardinal Manning.

EIGHT men were killed in a collision on the Wabash road, near Warrenton, Mo., last week.

Nine horses bound for the races at Kansas City were killed also.

FROM now on our paper will be dated "Anacortes and Gibraltar," and there will be separate pages for the locals of each town. — Washington Farmer.

EVERY citizen of Lynden and vicinity should attend the meeting next Saturday evening in the Opera House and help on the plank road project.

J. B. Loughran, ex-mayor of North Des Moines, Iowa, said recently: "I have just recovered from a severe attack of la grippe. I used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and applied Chamberlain's Pain Balm to my breast. These remedies were just the thing in my case. My child had croup some years ago, and we used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy with perfect success, since then we have never been without these medicines in our house. I had a cousin who was a printer and was employed in a job office in this city, where they were printing circulars for Chamberlain. He had a deep-seated cold and a terrible cough, and while setting up a copy he made up his mind to buy a bottle. It cured his cough and that was the first time I ever knew anything of Chamberlain's remedies. I have been strongly in their favor ever since. My own experience and that of my family convinces me that these remedies are the best in the world. That may be strong language, but it is what I think." For sale by M. C. Hawley.

"A WORD ABOUT BORES."

Ever the Most Incurrable of the Ill Can Be Advised.

"I wonder if I ever bore my friends as that friend bores me?" sighed a gentleman as he bowed out a visitor from his office.

Certainly, every body is at times a bore, for this question of bores has two answers, writes Harkley Harker in the New York Weekly. There is no such thing as boring with an auger into a granite block. There is no such thing as boring with your finger into a pine log. A social bore must meet a social sensitive. Some men are never bored by anybody; they are of such unflinching good nature, such philosophic patience and helpfulness toward all, they read men so clearly and judge them so charitably, that the most persistent, bothersome fellow does not exasperate nor weary them. They say some skillful word, they listen, yet go on with their own affairs, they are masters of tact, and they are wise enough to foresee that the time may come when themselves will want a favor. But there are others to whom even a lovely child is a bore. Their best friends bore them more than half the time. These people are in a chronic condition of selfishness, and every one bores them who fails to contribute something to their majesties' comfort or happiness. More than half the bores are not bores at all. In fact, we ourselves are boreable—we are hypersensitive. We want our friendships to be all receipts and no outgoes; and if a friend insists on our doing a little something for him by way of amusement in return we are bored. I say we; yet not all of us, kind reader, at all times. We mean to give and take generally. But we have our times and seasons of being over-sensitive, when even our dear old mother herself would seem to bore us. "I bore you," said a shabby gentleman to a young financier in the back room of a bank some years ago. "To confess the truth, you do," replied the young man, smartly. The old man got quietly out of his chair, folded up his patent, which he had been exhibiting, and politely took his grip-sack and himself off. That patent has now become worth its millions, and the smart young financier is now at work as a clerk in the office of the great company of which the old inventor is president. Had this financier been less nervous or sensitive he might not have so missed his fortune. It is hardly safe to tell any decent man that he bores you. The result is stinging, and is rarely forgotten. In fact, I think patience to endure being bored, and not show your fret, is one of the happiest qualities of mind for successfully dealing with men.

Who is a bore? The man with a hobby. The tedious, uninteresting talker. The borrower. The fellow who boasts and tells about himself all the while. The friend who can't keep a good situation six months, and always comes round for new letters of introduction. The inveterate funny fellow, who can never talk sober sense. The homely woman who gets too near you when conversing on her long yarns. The dandish youth who makes a long, long call and sits in dumb silence expecting you to do all the entertaining. The man or woman who calls too often. The person who persecutes you with genuinely kind invitations to come and visit him, and will never take no for an answer. The fellow who is always on the contrary side, and fires up with: "Let us argue the point." The good soul who is always preaching to you "that smoking is killing you." The curious person who picks and peeps, that he or she may find out a secret that you do not wish to tell. The very, very smart man who always wants to teach you something. The visitor on whose face you see constantly written, "What shall we do next to amuse ourselves?" notwithstanding you have just jumped from one thing to another ever since he or she has been a guest in the house. The writer of lengthy letters full of platitudes, which keep you continually in his debt. The man with nothing to do, who drops in on you when you have every thing to do.

The list is capable of addition. Some persons would bore you who would not bore me. I am vexed by some whom you call "perfectly delightful." Taste has much to do with the matter, the hidden law of likes and dislikes. Hence I never allow myself to take another person's word for it; I'll wait and see if I am bored. Some men begin by boring you; but they end by endowing and blessing you. I know a certain college professor who is the most tedious person in the world for the first half day that you are in his company. But after that he seems to wake up; he lets you into his very soul. His company is the finest delight.

My experience is that they who talk most about bores are themselves even less capable of trying to annoy than the patience than ordinary mortals who do not have so much to say on the subject. Good nature, sound health, a manly or womanly heart, full of sympathy for the rest of mankind, is not very often bored. We mortals are all here together on the footstool. Take us as we run, we are not so very different one from another. The earth is a grand and glorious arena touching; square miles are being populated. We must learn to laugh at each other's follies and find the jewel in every heart, for there certainly is one. It is going to be a worse world for the oversensitive soul who is only seeking his own comfort and wants nothing from the rest of us except what he can make contribute to his own happiness.

Even the most incurrable bore can be advised. Try it. Tell him kindly that he is tiresome on certain lines. You are his friend. Get him right, and frankly set him right. You will be surprised to discover how often the bore is in perfect ignorance of his offense. If he is a genuine good fellow, you will see him blush with the shame of the information; it will be unexpectably painful to him; he can hardly believe you at first. But later on he will thank you fervently, and he will improve his manners, greatly to your own and his own social comfort and welfare. There are few of us, however, who are innocent enough ourselves to attempt this, unless we say: "Tell me, as I tell you."

AMAZED THE HEARERS.

Two Ministerial Plagiarists Preach the Same Sermon in Succession.

Two village newspapers up this way are exchanging stories of their experiences in reporting plagiarized sermons. The next Sunday Pastor B. in turn occupied the sacred desk, and amazed the congregation by preaching word for word the sermon they had heard from Pastor A.'s lips a week before. It is intimated that each had cribbed the discourse from an old book of sermons and had preached it from the same pulpit in serene confidence that the plagiarism would never be found out.

The Ellenville Journal matches this story by another of a clergyman in that village who brought to the office the manuscript of a sermon he had preached the previous Sunday, and procured its publication as original with him. A day or two later somebody handed the editor a New York paper with the alleged original sermon reported in its columns as having been preached by an eminent Brooklyn divine a month before.

A similar incident relates to an eloquent and much-admired discourse preached by another Ellenville clergyman. "Before publication day," says the editor, "we stumbled upon a sermon in an old magazine, printed thirty years before. We gave out two pages of the old magazine to the compositor, and printed the matter in the Journal as a report of the eloquent discourse we had listened to on the previous Sunday. We were rewarded by receiving from the preacher cordial congratulations on the strict accuracy of our report of his sermon."

THE TWO-HEADED GIRL.

A Queer Case Which Once Came Before a New York Lawyer.

In the way of twins, says a New York letter to the Buffalo Express, you have probably seen the so-called two-headed girl, Millie-Christine, consisting of two negroes joined together by nature much more compactly than were the famous Siamese twins. Millie and Christine have been shown by Barnum and other exhibitors for many years, and are now aged about forty. The Siamese brothers married two wives, as you will remember, and lived in South Carolina after retiring from the museums until the death of one from disease was immediately followed by that of the other from fright. A post-mortem examination proved that physical connection, the saying that a surgical separation would have been fatal. In the case of Millie and Christine even the suggestion of parting them can not be considered, for they are joined from their hips nearly up to their shoulders. But it was not a question of freakish anatomy which led me to write of these women. Ex-Judge Dittenhoefer is a New York lawyer to whom I had upon me with many of their knotty legal questions.

"But no case was ever presented to me that was easier to decide, and yet more curiously novel," the lawyer recently said to me, "than this case of the two-headed girl. Dick Fitzgerald, through whose show agency much of the business of the museums was done, recalls this matter, which came to me about a year ago, but has never been published. Fitzgerald called on me with a letter from Millie-Christine requesting me to find out whether, if they were to marry one and the same man, it would constitute bigamy in the eye of the law. It was evident enough, although they did not say so explicitly, that an offer of joint marriage had been made to them and that they contemplated an acceptance in case the tripartite union would be lawful. They had had at all ways been advertised as 'a two-headed girl,' the claim being made on their behalf that they were one individual with two heads, four arms and four legs. If that view of them could be accepted in law then a single husband would be quite proper. But they were pious Methodists and had no notion of doing any thing wrong, legally or religiously. Fitzgerald wished my professional opinion for the guidance of the twins. Of course, the theory that they were one person was entirely untenable, and I had no difficulty in forming an opinion that their joint marriage to one man would be bigamy for him. It would entail no criminal punishment on the wives, nor was it likely that proceedings would ever be had against him under the peculiar circumstances. But I had not made up my mind of the question ever came before a court, they would surely be decided twins, and only the one marriage ceremony which preceded the other would be valid, while the second one, although it might have occurred a minute later, would be invalid, and would possibly subject the husband to prosecution. At the same time I reminded Fitzgerald of the late Charles O'Connor's remark when he was asked whether it was legal to shoot a burglar to death on sight. "The law would say hang you for it," he exclaimed, "but no public prosecutor or judge or jury would punish you for it; so shoot the burglar." After the same fashion I advised Fitzgerald that Millie-Christine's prospective husband might be nobody to State's prison for bigamy, but that nobody would ever undertake to do it. However, the two-headed girl concluded to live unmaried."

This is an age of inventions, discoveries and general advancement. In no direction has advancement been greater than in the matter of improved illumination. Electricity has come into general use in cities, but for the country and small towns it is impracticable. However a good, clear light is now produced by the Excelsior Gas Burner and the French Illuminating Fluid. This is safe, cheap and clean. No chimneys are used, so their cost as well as the labor of keeping them clean is saved; besides the lamp don't explode. L. W. Babcock is agent for Whatcom and Skagit counties. Tradesmen should remember that the new law making the secretary of state the sealer of weights and measures, goes into effect June 26. The various county auditors will advertise in two newspapers the fact that they are authorized as sealers of weights and measures for the county and that all persons using weights, scales and measures are required under penalty to have the same tested and sealed according to the United States standards.—West Coast Trade.

Dr. B. Hamlin, of Lemore, Cal., says a few dozen bottles of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy which is sold there created such a demand for the remedy that he could not well get along without it. No one can fully appreciate the real value of this remedy until they have given it a trial. Those who use it find it so much superior to any other remedy they have ever tried that they recommend it to their friends, and that is what makes it so popular. For sale by M. C. Hawley.

PLANK ROADS.

A meeting has been called for Saturday evening in the Opera House, to devise ways and means of securing the extension of the Guide Meridian plank road to Lynden. Everyone who owns a lot or an acre of land near here, or who ever expects to, and every man in business should attend this meeting. Although the plank road may not appear as necessary now as before we became sure of a railroad to Drayton, yet this out-let is of so great advantage to us that no one ought to withhold encouragement of the project. A good plank road to Whatcom will increase the value of property on each side of it by at least ten per cent, and will be of advantage to every one who buys a sack of flour or a pound of sugar. Come to the meeting Saturday evening.

Democratic State Organization.

A call signed by the county central committees of twenty-nine counties of the state has been issued for a meeting to organize a state association of democratic societies. Immediate steps will be taken to secure the attendance of speakers of national reputation, and the exact date of the meeting will be placed not later than September 1, 1890.

Washington Crops.

The hop crop this season promises to be one of great value throughout growing districts. Contractors are offering 15 to 16 cents in advance for the seasons crop, which means about a two-thirds profit. It is estimated that in the vicinity of Orting there will be raised $80,000 worth, while contracts have already been made at Puyallup for nearly 150,000 pounds at 15 cents.

Wheat in the vicinity of Colfax is in a surprisingly good condition, many fields being three feet in height now. A. Keyes of that place has a large acreage, which he states he would not give a nickel to be insured sixty-five bushels per acre on.

The crop prospects about Rosalia could not be more promising. Grain is making an excellent showing and will probably be the largest yield for years, while in numbers of orchards in the vicinity the trees are so heavily laden with fruit that part will have to be shaken off to prevent the trees from being broken down.

All throughout the Palouse country farmers are rejoicing at this season's crop prospects. Fruit is looking fine and strawberries and cherries are commencing to ripen along Snake river. All kinds of fruit are raised, and to take care of this and the river fruit a cannery is talked of in Pullman. The owners of Snake river orchards have formed a combination, which will probably keep the price of fruit pretty high this summer.

One farmer in the vicinity of Ellensburg has thirty acres of rye grass which bids fair to produce four tons to the acre. Strawberries have been selling in Goldendale the past week three boxes for 25 cents.—West Coast Trade.

A communication comes to us from Clear Brook in reference to the burning of a Mr. Anderson's house. Not being signed we cannot publish it. Always sign your name although not necessarily for publication.

ALL ABOUT EIDER-DOWN.

How the Eider Duck Makes Her Nest, and How It Is Robbed.

The Famous "Holms" on the Low Islands Off the Coast of Norway—How the Down Is Stolen by Professional Hunters of the Arctic.

The wonderfully soft and warm substance which we call eider-down, says L. B. Fletcher in the New York Home Journal, is produced by the eider duck, an inhabitant of the Arctic Ocean. It is proper to call these birds inhabitants of the ocean, for they pass the greater part of their lives far out at sea, only coming to land for a little while in spring for the purpose of laying and hatching their eggs.

They are very awkward on land, but are wonderful swimmers and divers, descending twelve fathoms below the surface of the water and remaining submerged as long as five minutes at a time. Their food consists principally of mollusks, which they pick up from the bed of the sea.

Their favorite laying places are certain small, low islands off the coast of Norway, which are called "eider-holms." The birds visit these islands in pairs, which present a striking contrast in appearance, the drakes being brilliantly colored in black, white and green, while the females are of a dull reddish brown, matching the color of the scanty vegetation so perfectly that even a practiced hunter can hardly discover them when they crouch down among the reeds.

On coming ashore the duck proceeds very deliberately to choose a place for a nest, while the drake follows and occasionally gives warning of real or fancied danger. The duck is very hard to suit, and it is not an unusual thing for her, after examining all likely spots, to open doors, to march boldly into a house and coolly select what she considers a suitable place for her nest, such as the oven if it happens to be unused at the time. The human inmates of the house will come her gladly, supply her with food, and cheerfully submit to any small inconveniences like the temporary loss of their oven, for they know that their greedy wife may be good for her bread and lodging. When the duck has selected a place she gathers grass and sticks and builds her nest. Then she plucks the soft down from her breast and makes a wonderful mat, which not only covers the bottom of the nest but rises so far above the edge that it can be folded over the eggs when the duck leaves the nest in search of food.

When the six or eight eggs are laid they are seized, together with the valuable eider-down mat, by the people of the house, and the duck goes off in sorrow to her mate, who awaits her on the shore, as his cottage never rises to such a pitch as to lead him into the house.

The duck, somewhat wiser than before, proceeds to build another nest out of doors, and as her own down feathers are exhausted she calmly plucks the drake's breast as bare as her own. After this outrageous treatment he goes off in disgust and rejoins his companions at sea. This time the duck is allowed to hatch her brood without human interference. But whenever she leaves the nest two or three eggs are liable to be stolen by some other duck who has a nest near by. The marauder carefully folds the down coverlet over the robbed nest again and carries the stolen eggs to her own nest. In this way the eggs are changed about so that a duck may finally hatch out a brood containing not a single one of her own offspring. As soon as the ducklings are all hatched out the mother or foster-mother, if undisturbed, endeavors to lead her flock to the shore.

This march to the sea is to the ducklings what teaching is to human infants, for the most "trying" time of their lives, for they are exposed to the attacks of birds of prey and other enemies. Usually the islanders interfere again at this point, but now their interference benefits the ducks as well as themselves. They gather the down and carry the ducklings in baskets to the shore, the old duck following them very contentedly.

When the shore is reached the baskets are emptied into the water. The old ducks plunge in, and after a good deal of commotion swim out to sea, each followed by a flock of ducklings, some of which she has never seen before.

The duck does not always make her first nest in a house, of course, and if the first nest is not disturbed she will simply hatch her brood and put to sea with them, and the drake will not be robbed of his feathers. But the islanders are very watchful, and the first nest rarely escapes, no matter where it is built.

Sometimes the duck's down is sufficient to supply the second nest, and in this case the drake remains with his family. This nest is then robbed also, and the poor duck is forced to begin a third, with the help of the drake's down feathers. The rule among the eider-down hunters is to rob every nest until the drake's feathers, which differ in color from those of his mate, appear among the down. When this occurs it is known that the pair will build no more that year, and so the eggs are allowed to hatch in order to preserve the species.

A single nest will furnish at least an ounce of down, which is worth on the spot about twenty-five cents, or our money. As the birds visit the island in vast numbers the collection and sale of the down mats is an important source of income to the inhabitants.

WEATHER PROVERBS.

What the Little Birds Tell While Nesting and on the Wing.

That birds have long been guides to sailors and agriculturists every one who knows any thing about popular weather prognostics is well aware of. Not only have the flight and general action of birds been noted by all civilized nations, says the Savannah (Ga.) News, but among barbarous tribes in this and other lands the migratory habits of the feathered tribe have been noted by the Government signal bureaus. Wind, rain and other atmospheric changes are predicted by those who narrowly watch the migration of birds, and sailors in particular who are close observers of the heavens above, and the atmosphere around them and the waters beneath them, base their prognostics on all the peculiar phases of land, water and sky and the elements of life which people them.

Among the birds which serve to guide the sailors to look out for squalls, the sailor expects wind when the cormorants fly landward. If the birds fly to the heights and, circling round, utter shrill cries, a storm is approaching. If the parrots whistle on shipboard it will rain. If they dress their feathers and are waked it will storm the next day. If the parrots gather under the stern of a ship bad weather will follow. The stormy petrel surely betokens stormy weather, and no sooner do they gather in numbers under the wake of a ship than sailors prepare to meet an impending tempest. Hunters are close observers of the habits of birds, and many prognostics are learned from the vocabulary of an experienced hunter, who will stay in doors in the morning when an amateur hunter will be tempted out by a meek sky, or when the rains, or wind find that moderate temperature in the morning is no sure precursor of a warm day. Among the prognostics the hunter draws from birds a few will suffice:

NEVER WENT TO LODGE.

A Man Who Ought to Have a Monument a Mile High.

It was says the Washington Capital, one of those wild nights you read of in nine novels out of every ten. The cold rain splashed viciously against the pane and the shutters rattled and banged as the stiff gusts of wind swept through the deserted streets.

It was a lodge night, but Brother Fay concluded to stay at home for some reason, particularly as his mother-in-law was on her periodical inspection tour and spending a couple of days with him.

With a sigh he lolled back in the rocker, his feet in a chair and a newspaper spread open before him like a screen.

Presently he chuckled, and wife and mother looked up from their sewing inquiringly.

"Rather remarkable," he explained, looking over the top of the paper, and with a suspicious twitch about the corners of his mouth, he read aloud:

"A model husband died recently at Cornish, N. H. He had been married forty-three years and never spent a night away from home."

"Well, I should say he was a model husband, I broked up the old lady, grimly. 'Just think of it, Mary, dead forty-three years and every evening spent at home. No lodge could coax him away from his family,' she added, significantly. 'Poor man, he ought to have a monument a mile high,' and she sighed deeply.

Brother Fay held the paper a little higher and continued:

"Never spent a night from home—must have been paralyzed."

Without the storm seemed to beat harder and louder (a habit storms have at such times), while within silence reigned, save the suppressed rustle of the paper and the "swish" of the thread through the pillow-case the old lady was working on.

DEAF DEACON JONES.

He Wakes Up the Prayer-Meeting with a Semi-Humorous Story.

Out in one of the Worcester County hills where there is a small village, in all the Listener of the Boston Transcript knows lives still, a locally prominent man and a pillar of the church who was very deaf.

The praying brother saw it was no use and brought his prayer to a close with a hasty "Amen." His meaning Deacon X. went on:

"Brethren and sisters," said he, "I've got somethin' dreadful to tell ye."

The congregation was on the qui vive. "Yes," said he, "I want to ask the prayers of this 'ere meetin' for my sister out in York State. She is in deep affliction. Her husband has been assassinated."

A thrill of horror went over the little assembly as they waited for him to speak more definitely.

"Yes, brethren," he said, presently, "he's hung himself in his barn!"

It was horrible, but the extraordinary nature of the "assassination" tinged the announcement with a little of the color of ridiculousness.

FUNNY JOSH BILLINGS.

A Document Written by the Humorist Over Twenty Years Ago.

That quaint humorist, Josh Billings, penned the following letter in Carleton's book store in this city more than a score of years ago, says the New York Friend, and forwarded it to his literary friend, Mr. Bowen, of Fort Plain:

"DEAR CHARLES: If you can get me a few kalls to lecture on your way it will be done in my face to you; the fact is that I am so cussedly fat that I can't look at a man's face for one of the Book Billings. Those pictures of a man while living, I ought to have had at least 500 from the London publishers, but I never saw one."

"My life has been a success on the far, for I am still alive, but peculiarly, who ever made money by playing the eccentric wanderer from one rude vocation to another, but little more than the common ragger and honest pension hunter? I have had much comfort out of all this, and would not take the best farm in the State of New York for the right to buy the best. My literary raid has been short, but sweet. I have had as much fun out of it as any man ever lived, and when I reflect that it is but little more than five years since I first put me on paper, I can certainly feel that I have not made much coin. I have the quiet satisfaction of knowing that I have never written a line in malice against the truth or virtue of the world. I might have gained more wisdom by sleeping in a closet, but would have missed the lark's wild song in the morning and the sober host of the midnight owl in the wilderness. I was never sick all day in my life; never saw a man in a ragged coat but what I was willing to know the reason; have lived among the high and the low, and never put in my pocket a knife or a pistol. Excuse this if it looks like egotism."

"HENRY W. SHAW, Josh Billings. 'New York, January 23, 1857.'"

It was called a cow. A cow is an animal what has four legs. Cows are made of different colors, black, white, yellow and crushed strawberry color. The milk what we get in a morning comes from the cow. The milk is fixed in between the two last legs of a cow. I have noticed that a black cow gives white milk. We get roast beef from this animal. The boots we wear
