AGRICULTURE IN MAINE.—There are about 50,000 farmers in Maine, who probably own three millions of acres of land, valued at over $100,000,000, or about one-half of our State valuation. During the year these study tillers of the soil have had their labors rewarded by geneross crops. The yield of hay and potatose, their two staple crops, has been unusually good, while other products have also yielded abundantly. No other occupation in Maine pays better than farm lang the annual value of un copie one $60,000,000—nerton the hay crop alone. June Pillsburk, of Pontiac, Ill, decided on May 9 that the directors of a public school have a right to dictate what books shall be studied and used, and hence can order the Bible to be read as a text-book in connection-with other studies. The decision was rendered in avuit brought by a Roman Catholic, who had instructed his son to pay no attention when the Bible was read in the school, but to go on studying his lessons without making any unnecessary disturbance. Attendance during the religious exercises was not rendered compulsory; any pupil whose parents objected to the Bible-reading could stay away; but the regulations required all who were present but paiding their books and the reputations was suspended from the school in consequence of his conditions of the school mistress.
