Caught in a Canyon. WRITTEN FOR THE PORTLAND BULLETIN BY G. W. CROCKER.

Seven or eight years ago, when everybody on the Pacific Coast was more or less excited in relation to quartz mines...

The rain continued to pour down in torrents, and as there was a sort of shelving rock under one of the walls of the canon, it was resolved to make that our sleeping place.

We had remained huddled together on the top of the hill for perhaps an hour, when we felt the water encroaching upon us, and we became aware that our position was not so safe as we imagined.

Fortunately the water was warm, or we would have been chilled to death; as it was, our teeth chattered and we were uncomfortably cold.

We looked about us for means of escape, but could see none whatever. The walls of the canon towered fully two hundred feet above us.

To add to our horror, we saw an immense tree coming with irresistible force down the canon. If it should strike us, we would be doomed to almost certain destruction.

and fifty to three hundred feet high, and almost perpendicular. The hillock was perhaps fifteen or twenty feet high at its apex...

not a sparrow to fall to the ground unnoticed.

The suspense was terrible while it lasted, but fortunately it was only a few moments. The huge tree was borne along with rapidity...

I naturally supposed that he had failed to get upon the tree, and that he either sunk beneath the angry waters or was still struggling in the stream.

The tree, borne along by the current, moving swiftly down the stream through the canon.

The water was roaring and dashing against the walls of the canon, while its surface was covered with trees, logs, and driftwood...

"A bully boat and a bully crew— Ah, ah, ah, a-a-a-ah! And a bully pilot, I tell you— Oh, oh, oh, o-o-o-oh!"

I shall not attempt to describe how the long hours of the night slowly waned away, and how we were compelled to cling to the limbs to keep from falling into the water.

turned loose. Catching them, we mounted and returned to Martin's Rancho, where we got something to eat.

A couple of the party were then sent to San Bernardino to obtain supplies for our own had been lost in the canon.

Sponge Fishing—From the account given by Vice Consul Green, of the Tunisian sponge fishery in his report to the Foreign Office...

The Arab fishermen, principally natives of Markenah and Jerbah employ boats called sandals, manned by from four to seven persons...

The spears used by the Greeks are shorter than those employed by the natives and Sicilians, but with wonderful adroitness they are enabled to reach sponges covered by sixty feet of water.

Disturbance in the Sun.—Familiar as we all are with the great luminary of the solar system, astronomers at this particularly epoch were never so vividly excited in regard to its physical character.

Electricity is a slow coach in comparison. It takes a long time to travel, and its path is not so direct as that of the sun.
