Improvements and Changes During the past Season.

Agricultural improvements are perhaps the surest and most certain sources of permanent wealth and prosperity; other special branches of industry may more suddenly increase the wealth and the apparent prosperity of the community; but this is as liable, oftentimes, to disappear at the first financial crash, fully as quickly as it arose. No community will be always prosperous, that depends for its success wholly upon a single industry; yet agriculture, when there is a reasonably good market for its products, affords the best foundation on which to develop all other branches of industry.

RAPID INCREASE IN WEALTH.

A few years ago, no part of the Sound country presented so dreary an appearance as the dismal swamps and tide flats around the mouth of the Skagit. The small prairies of Whidbey Island were then considered to be the cream of the Puget Sound country, if not to contain most of the really valuable agricultural land to be found in this whole section.

The change consequent on the diking and cultivation of those marshes is tending rapidly towards making the region around La Conner the wealthiest and most productive agricultural settlement on the coast, and second to very few communities to be found anywhere else in the world.

This year there are a number of grain growers there, who each of them raised more grain, than all the grain produced this season on Whidbey Island.

The scenery formerly so dreary and dismal, is rapidly changing, so that now the level and productive fields, protected by the swirling dikes, bordered on the one side by the bright waters of the Sound, while the forests of the upland form a dark border, with the many other improvements visible on every hand, furnishes scenes of natural beauty excelled in no other region.

Nearly all the settlers on these marshes were men of very small means, who were compelled to go very heavily in debt to improve their places; yet the hard times of the past two years, which brought ruin and dismay upon the logging interests of the Sound, and have so surely crippled and distressed the log raisers of the Puget Sound, made comparatively no impression on the grain growers of the tide marshes, almost not perceptibly retarding the rapidity of the improvements being made by them.

Last spring, a detailed account was published by us of the condition of the tide marshes, the amount to be reclaimed and the amount already reclaimed and in cultivation, together with carefully prepared estimates of the probable yield of grain for this year, and the amount of land that would be diked and other similar improvements likely to be made.

The improvements actually made have agreed quite closely with these estimates. The yield of grain has not greatly varied, except where the ground was soaked by salt water last winter, caused by the high tides breaking through the dikes in a great many places and flooding the land; where this took place the yield was not over an average of 60 bushels to the acre. Where no salt water appeared, the usual average of about 80 bushels of barley or oats per acre was realized; those being the kinds of grain raised.

Those who ran threshing machines the past season are requested to preserve an account of all the grain threshed by them; as the account presented of their interests last spring, will be rewritten so as to show the exact number of tons of grain raised, and the number of acres under cultivation the past season; with as complete estimates as can be prepared for next year, after having visited this winter nearly every tide marsh rancher of the Sound.

IMPROVEMENTS AT LA CONNER.

None who approach the place on a steamer can fail to notice the numerous and valuable improvements along the front of the town, and on the bank of the Swinomish Slough made this season. The two large dealers in general merchandise, L. L. Andrews and Gatches, each occupy fine, new store rooms, built the past year. They have also large warehouses in which to store goods.

Gatches' new store, size 24x33 feet, is completed and full of goods. His old store is moved onto an adjoining lot and converted into a dwelling house.

Mr. Powers failing to move his paper to La Conner, the building put up last summer for his office, has been occupied since its completion, by Fred. Dyer as a butcher's shop. Meat is furnished by McNaught Bros. of Seattle. He sells a great deal of meat, and seems to be doing a good business.

A frontage of some 300 feet has been made from the wharf of Gatches to Andrews and 62 feet beyond. This is all brought out to an even front with the Gatches wharf, and forming in all a wharf frontage of some 400 feet.

Near the north end of this new wharf, J. F. Dweley has a new furniture store two stories high, 22 feet posts, and 24x36 feet on the ground. The upper story is used as a workshop, the lower as a salesroom. He holds 30 feet of wharf frontage. He is a good workman and will do well there at his business.

J. E. Davis, the ingenious and skillful blacksmith and machinist, finding it too inconvenient to haul the large amount of iron used by him, from the wharf to the shop and then haul the manufactured iron to the water again, concluded to save all this by building a blacksmithing establishment and machine shop by the side of Dweley's furniture store on the new wharf. The size of the new shop is 25x35 feet.

The skill of Mr. Davis is of the greatest possible value to the large farmers there, in keeping their steam engines and other costly machinery in good running order. They could well afford to pay him a large annual salary. Just for this purpose only. He is also the inventor of a number of practical, labor saving machines; among the number his stamp puller, made of two different sizes, one being made so that a single man can work it, and at the end of an 18 foot lever lift a weight of 12 tons. With this hand machine a man is expected to pull about 50 stamps, two feet in diameter, or under, per day. The other stamp puller is of one horse power. A 300 lbs. draft at the end of the same length of lever will lift a weight of 40 tons, and be of sufficient power to pull most any stamp, seven feet in diameter.

The Telegraph operator, Mr. Gilliland, occupies a new office, adjoining L. L. Andrews' store. Its size is 16x25 feet.

Mr. G. makes himself generally useful; besides running the Telegraph office and being clerk of the District court of Whatcom county, he does a large land office business, makes an efficient agent for the White sewing machine and keeps for sale quite a stock of tobacco, cigars, fruits, nuts, etc. Mr. J. S. Conner has put an addition onto the old Telegraph office and temporarily occupies it as a residence until he can build elsewhere.

A building two stories high, size 24x60 feet, has been put up alongside of the La Conner Hotel. Milt B. Cook occupies the lower story as a saloon and billiard hall. The upper will doubtless be used as sleeping rooms for the Hotel.

Adjoining Gatches' warehouse a building has just been put up, size 18x28, for Hanson, father and son. The elder one, Henry Hanson, will carry on the business of harness maker; his son, F. W. Hanson, will act as the jeweler for that section.

John O'Loughlin has gone back to his old trade as a tinner; having started a stove and tinshop nearly opposite the Maryland house a few weeks since.

Joseph Alexander, the popular and successful druggist, has done an excellent business, considering the hard times this season. He has recently purchased a lot for $400, situated between the tinshop and W. R. Andrews' law office. On this lot he will soon erect a two story building, size 10x40 feet, with a flat tin roof. This building will give sufficient room for the increased stock he will carry of goods in his line.

W. R. Andrews has built a dwelling house on the flats, size 18x24 feet.

A. Seigfried has built a story and one-half addition to his residence. The size of the addition is 12x24 feet.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

The La Conner Literary and Debating Society is in successful operation again this winter, with N. E. Goodell as the President and W. R. Andrews, Secretary. It meets every Thursday night. W. R. Andrews is considered to most popular speaker. He has always taken a great amount of interest in all such means of self improvement. This goes far to account for his success as a lawyer, and his ability as a public speaker.

Padilla also has a Literary Society, with E. A. Sisson as President, and H. E. Dewey as Secretary, meeting every other Saturday evening. The Hon. R. E. Whitney is the leading debater.

OTHER ITEMS.

J. J. Conner, the pleasant spoken proprietor of the La Conner Hotel has been subject to business and other troubles and misfortunes to such a degree as to awaken for him the general sympathy of the whole community; who all desire that his troubles may soon be ended, and that he may find himself prosperous again once more.

Wm. Derling cut his knee nearly two months ago, at the mill near Deception Pass. He can begin to use his leg a little, but his knee will always be stiffened by the injury. Since the accident he has stopped at the Maryland House. The Hon. John Mc-Glenn, the Councilman elect for this District, and the proprietor of this excellent hotel, wears his trousers easy, and does all the business his house can well accommodate.

A large share of the money expended on improvements in and around La Conner the past season was expended by J. S. Conner, the wealthiest citizen of that community; whose public spirit and enterprise contributed so much the past year to the upbuilding of that place.

HISTORICAL COINAGE.

[EUGENE LAWRENCE.]

History finds much of its safest material in coin, and these silent witnesses of the fate of nations are constantly re-appearing to sustain or amend its narrative. They reach back in a long yet varying career to the opening of European civilization, they fluctuate with all its changes. When nations were young their coins were rude and heavy, but always of full value; the early Roman quincussis contained its full five pounds of copper; it was a weight rather than coin. The gold of the flourishing seaport of Miletus, the Liverpool or New York of the East, is the earliest we meet with, and five centuries or more before our era was current in the ports of the Euxine and on the coast of Spain. Miletus was long the centre of discovery, adventure, trade; its Raleighs and Cabots followed in the path of the Phoenicians, and almost equalled them. The colonies of Miletus covered the shores of the Black Sea; an honest currency supported its commercial enterprises. In Lydia, where coins are said to have been first used, it is also said that the retail trades began. Gold coins were seldom or never struck at Athens, but the Attic silver was famous for its purity, and circulated over the known world. The most splendid of the Greek gold coins were the "phillips" of Macedonia. They were first coined by Philip II, and perfected by Alexander the Great, and these fine examples of ancient art still adorn the cabinets of the lovers of coins in Europe and America.

Curious is it to trace the varying features of the rulers of mankind on these unchangeable memorials. Their emblems often almost indicate their history or confirm it. On the fine coins and medals of Alexander we see the hero's striking face, half intellectual, half debased and brutal. Snyron, proud of its ancestry, places on its coins the head of Homer. From Ephesus come countless medals and pieces of money inscribed with the image of the temple and the form of Diana. On the coins of Greece and Rome appear the symbols of the earliest republicans. Republics began the system of exchange by which all modern business is transacted. Archons of Athens, officials of various rank, are recorded on the fine silver coins of Greece. At Rome gave consuls, tribunes, popular leaders, engrave their names or faces on the varying currency. It is easy to detect them, to distinguish the republican from the monarch, a Brutus from a Caligula, the higher elements of character shining out from the countenances of men who studied the public welfare rather than their own. But at length the world acknowledges a single master. The Roman emperors appear on their coinage represented with a singular exactness. The fat, false Augustus, the symbol of reaction, is stamped on a thousand coins; one can never mistake him. Then comes the brutal Tiberius, heavy Claudius, Vespasian, rude but almost honest. Trajan the beloved shines on many a medal and coin. The gentle, pleasant countenance of Marcus Aurelius still smiles upon us from his metal shield, at the dead face of Commodus.

The gold aureus of the Antonines is a magnificent coin, the symbol of the world's prosperity. It was worth about five dollars and a dime; but as the empire fell, its coinage was debased. The tyrants plundered the people by every art; they lowered the value of gold and silver money until it was nearly worthless; they circulated pieces washed over with a thin coating for gold and silver; they were advocates of inflation and "watered" money. Commerce stopped, the world stood still, until Constantine—perhaps Diocletian—reformed the currency, issued gold and silver coins of full value, and fixed at Constantinople that taste for pure money—that financial honesty—to which it owed much of its wealth and its renewal. Through the middle ages the gold bezant of Constantinople was seldom tampered with, was almost always pure. The great city on the Bosphorus was the wealthiest of all, its revenues in the twelfth century enormous. Soon after, Venice, in the fulness of its commercial greatness, began to coin its excellent gold and silver, and the mints of Florence poured forth a ceaseless tide of gold florins, the purest and finest money of the time. Even the Mohammedans of Syria imitated the bezant of Constantinople, changing only the inscription. The solidus, the aureus, the bezant, the splendid coins of the Roman Empire, became every where the instruments of trade. The modern coins imitate their value. An English sovereign is worth a little less than a solidus, an American half eagle not quite so much as the bezant. Our most common gold coin is the direct descendant of that on which shone the mild faces of Trajan and Marcus Aurelius, or the earlier, still more splendid, statue of Alexander and republican Miletus.

Honest money and commercial and manufacturing greatness have always appeared together. Its coins are the surest indications of the character of each government, of its prosperity, its decay. Weak, dishonest governments have always debased the currency, strong ones improve it. The stern, vindictive, ruthless rulers of Venice kept their gold pure in the midst of ceaseless wars. Holland became the centre of commercial honor and greatness; its credit and its wealth are still undiminished. England in Elizabeth's reign reformed its currency, imitated Holland; it has steadily pursued its practice of preserving a perfect purity in coinage; it has had for sixty years the best currency in the world; its sovereign and his shifting circulate every where; their value is immutable. From the rude coins of the honest Alfred, the common ancestor of the Saxon race, to the latest money of Victoria, the English merchants and farmers have always had a tolerable means of exchange. The purity of its coinage has helped to make England rich, to give it the carrying trade of the world, to make it the successful nation, the prosperous manufacturer, the modern Tyre or Venice.

Our own coinage began in 1784-85; but instead of the faces of senators and monarchs, it bears only the figure

Annual Election for the Atheneum.

The meeting for the annual election of officers of the Snohomish Atheneum will be held at the Atheneum Hall, in Snohomish City, Snohomish county, Washington Territory, on Monday, December 23d, 1878, at 2 P. M.

By order of the President, ELDRIDGE MORSE, Secretary.

A few weeks ago, Mr. J. S. Allen left this place for San Francisco, announcing that he was going away on legal business. He returned on Saturday last, bringing with him Mrs. J. S. Allen herself, nee Miss Furlough, of Oakland, Cal., where they were married on the fifth of Nov.

The Tender Passion et. al. vs. $1.50 Cash.

An exchange says that a letter recently produced in a breach-of-promise suit contained the following sentence: "Dearest Love—I swallowed the postage stamp on your letter, because I knew your dear lips had touched it."

But the man from Ill. sells out, and a shotgun heals the wound! A youth of sixteen, in Du Page county, Ill., fell madly in love with his school-mistress, aged thirty, but his wise father induced him to give up his sweetheart, with whom he had planned an elopement to Kansas, for and in consideration of "a real nice, double barreled shotgun."

But New Jersey is—well: A Newark paper is responsible for this: "Denest" he murmured, ecstatically, as he folded her in his arms for the first time, "let me sample the nectar of your lips."

And then— He had broken his promise to marry the girl, and her father wanted a money consideration to help heal a wounded heart. The young man said he would consider a reasonable proposition, "Well then" said the irate father, who was seeking justice for his daughter, "Young man, how does a dollar and a half strike you?"
