WATER WORKS.

The Holly System to Supply Spokane Falls.

After many days, and numerous delays, and frequent disappointments it now looks as though the long hoped for water works for the suffering city of Spokane Falls were to be constructed and put in operation at once, or as soon as the piping can arrive and work be pushed ahead.

No city of this size in the country ever felt the want of an abundance of water to so great an extent as Spokane, notwithstanding the existence of as fine a stream as ever flowed between two banks, fretting its shores right in town. On account of the rocky formations and the great depth to go to reach water in the greater portion of the city, a well is a luxury enjoyed by very few, and the mass of the population has depended upon carriers to supply the fluid for domestic use.

This primitive system is to be superseded by one of the most improved modern water works in use, will be hailed by the entire public with thanksgiving. Last winter several propositions were presented to the city council for putting in works here, one of which was accepted. Those to whom the franchise was granted turned over the same to W. R. Moore, Chas. Sweeney and others, this spring. These gentlemen have carried on exhaustive correspondence with a number of firms representing various systems in vogue throughout the United States, and have at last settled upon a plan. When Mr. Moore undertakes anything of a business character it can be depended upon that it will never linger along for the want of pushing. He does not permit things of that nature, in which he is interested, to rest, and in this case he has never ceased to work until all his plans were consummated. Recently he has had engineers here from the east, who have looked over the ground, calculated the cost and explained the advantages of the various methods of conducting water through pipes for city uses. Mr. Moore at last decided upon the Holly system, that has been used so successfully and with so much satisfaction in many cities of California. On Tuesday of this week a contract was entered into with Philip Buchner, Esq., of St. Paul, agent for the Holly works, who gives good and sufficient bonds for the faithful performance of the work. Mr. Buchner spent several days in the city surveying the land and making his calculations. According to the agreement entered into, the work is to be completed by the first of November, that time being granted to the contractor in case any delays may be experienced in receiving material. The pumping will be done by water power, and the water taken from the north branch of the river. A twelve-inch main will be laid out toward street, extending two blocks beyond the railroad. Capacious large pipes will extend east and west along Front street, Main street, Riverside avenue, Sprague street, First and Second streets. As rapidly as the pipes are laid valves will be inserted at the cross streets, thereby furnishing water as it is being built. The Holly is one of the best systems in use. With the pressure at command an unlimited supply of water can be furnished, and in case of fire is capable of throwing streams to the roofs of six-story buildings. With these works in operation engines are unnecessary, and the city will only be at the expense of hose and carts, and with an abundant supply of the former the town will be comparatively free from all danger from fire. The pumps are the perfection of modern construction, and will be ready when fire-plugs are opened anywhere in the city at bell rings at the works, and in a second the fire pressure is applied. Double pumps are furnished so that in case one becomes out of order, through any cause whatever, the other can be turned on immediately. Orders for the necessary piping, the very best manufactured, have been forwarded, and as soon as it arrives we may look for active work until the great object is obtained. It will require an expenditure of about $50,000 as a starter, and the money is ready. After constantly harping on and advocating water works for a year, it gives us pleasure to be able to report so early a completion of the desired object, and it is also a matter for congratulation to the parties to open the scheme are old-time residents, who have the public welfare at heart, and owning large property interests, will conduct the enterprise with fairness respecting the rights of all property holders, never taking advantage of their power to abuse the privilege granted by the city authorities. We expect those interested in this enterprise to make money out of it, if not immediately, yet in the near future, and they deserve to realize something on the investment, as they are putting good hard money in a public venture which will be a godsend to the place.

The Spokane Falls REVIEW has entered upon its second volume with every town in the county interested as well as the farming community.

CRYING IT DOWN.

Giving the Ceur d'Alene a Bad Name.

During the extreme height of the Ceur d'Alene mining excitement, just at a time when there should not have been a rush, few papers on the upper coast took the stand that "there was nothing in it," and rather encouraged travel to the diggings. Soon it became evident that there was too much suddenness to the breeze. State men without stopping to state the chances of a winter campaign had galloped into the only town in the diggings heading and blindly. That they had gone a gold hunting in haste and were repenting at leisure, with more leisure in hand than anything else. It took no forethought to foresee the result. Snowed in without a chance to prospect and no way to make a living, this deluded mob commenced pouring out of Eagle City as soon as the walking was safe. Having spent their money for grub, or wasted it in seeking the elephant, a big fit of disgust and discouragement cropped out. It became epidemic and hundreds of men returned to the outside world without striking a pick and spreading the report that the mines were a hoax, a snare and a delusion. A great many papers at once became virtuously indignant that anything should have been published in favor of the mines and devoted considerable space to denouncing the diggings. The REVIEW has always held the stand, ever since the first gold was taken out of the country, that the mines were good, basing the opinion on the reports brought to this city and the products of the earth so frequently exhibited here. We have been zealous in our advocacy of the mines, but we have been honest in it and believed that we were giving publicity to what was true. We still have unwavering faith in the section. It is a satisfaction to us to know that we have never advised the public to make the trip in mid winter, on the contrary, pointing out on all occasions the fallacy of attempting to do anything until May. Had the rush held off until this season of the year far different reports would have gone abroad in regard to the mines. We now believe that the country has had a set-back that it will not get over for a number of months, but that it will eventually recover its lost ground we have no doubts. Those who have remained and those who have since gone into the mines for the purpose of depending upon actual labor as a means of developing the mines are meeting with great encouragement. There is less fast life, outward show and superficial boom than three months ago, but as an offset every claim that is being worked pays, and pays well. It takes time and an outlay of money to develop a mining district. People cannot expect to find gold scattered about on the surface. It is hidden away, deep under ground, and in order to get at the prospector must work, individual. We have not met a single workman who has visited the camp since the snow disappeared who has not spoken in the most encouraging terms of the prospects, some going so far as to pronounce the mines the richest world has ever produced. It is hardly possible that all of these men, many of whom are old and experienced miners, should be mistaken. The Ceur d'Alene diggings may have lost caste with the public at a distance, it is barely possible they may peter out entirely, yet we verily believe that during the present summer developments will be made that will astonish everybody, and awaken a deeper interest in that region than has yet been manifested.

Look to it.

Our attention has been called to the existing broken condition of a number of the county roads, not only those leading into this city but the many that traverse the county in various directions. While the country is comparatively new, yet there is no reason why some system should not be laid down and followed out in the matter of keeping those highways in use in good repair. Complaints reach us that in many places washouts cut up the roads, and the county is particularly destitute in the matter of bridges, so much so that in some localities travel with loaded wagons is next to impossible. We recognize the fact that it requires time, labor and money to build up good roads, but the best in the world will rapidly go to wreck if a watchful eye is not kept on them and repairs be immediately made. It is one of the duties of the County Commissioners to see that public highways are kept up, and when they neglect that important matter they are derelict in carrying out the requirement of the office to which they have been elected. Let those vested with the authority for carrying out road work see to this very important subject and make an effort to put all of the principal county roads in good possible condition. It is an internal improvement in which every town in the county is interested as well as the farming community.

Strayed from the Path.

On Tuesday of this week an elderly gentleman, evidently ignorant of the ways of the world, arrived in this city from Minnesota. He had the appearance of one who had seen much trouble, and from his uncertain movements and suspicious manner of carrying on a conversation had evidently met with many rebuffs during his travels. His mission was an exceedingly sad one, and any one with a particle of sympathy for his fellow man could not speak to him without feeling an interest in his case and a fervent hope that he might accomplish the object of his mission, if not here, at least somewhere near. His story was one too oft repeated and too common nowadays. It seems that the old man, far away among the fertile valleys of Minnesota, has a rural home that up to a few months ago was made happy by the presence of a lovely and beloved daughter, blessed with a gentle and sunny disposition and a merry face. Her smile brightened the lonely home, and she moved about the idol of her parents. The old man's whole quantity of love was concentrated in this treasure. He had watched with a fond heart and loving eye the slow development of the child to womanhood, and his life was devoted to her every wish. She was the joy of his old days, and his future hopes centered in her happiness. Her slightest whim was law to him, and her every want, as far as laid in his power, was supplied. In an evil hour the tempter came, and the unfortunate woman fled from the only true protector she will ever know. The old, old result followed. A social outcast she entered upon a career of shame. The howl that that wretched woman uttered when she moved about with a grief too deep to be allayed by sympathy, far more poignant than that occasioned by death, he could not be comforted. At first he thought that if she would throw away the brightest jewel of woman her existence should be torn from his heart and he would only remember her as dead. But the old yearning would come back. The father's love overcame the first resolution, and praying that he might succeed in rescuing his child from degradation and sin he set out to find her and appeal to the remaining sparks of womanhood to abandon her ways, return to her home, her past forgiven and forgot. He traced her from one town to another westward, always too late to find her. He has met with many obstacles, disappointments and discouragements, frequently from those who should have enlisted their aid and encouragement. The last place he heard of the frail daughter was at Miles City, and he came here buoyed up by that hope born of a love that knows no failure. So far his researches have been fruitless, and he sincerely hopes that providence may yet aid the unfortunate man, and that when he comes face to face with the erring woman that she may abandon the course that she has been pursuing, return to her former home and gladden the heart of the forgiving father, filling the declining years of his life with happiness and contentment.

Again Tied Up.

The complications in which D. W. Small and the Montana Improvement Company are mixed took another phase this week, creating fodder for discussion, worry for all parties concerned and fat fees for the legal fraternity. Last week the property in the shape of the lumber yards of the company at Sprague, Cheney and this place were attached for $8,200 by D. W. Small. The necessary bonds were given and the yards released, but early this week the property was again tied up by a suit for $80,000 damages brought against the corporation by Mr. Small. The managers of the company were by no means paralyzed by the blow, for they soon had some fifty carloads of lumber under way for this station and a new lumber yard was opened alongside of the railroad. There is no predicting the termination of the case, and as the difficulty is to go before the courts for adjudication, it should be left to that tribunal to pass judgment upon its merits. The parties interested are well known along the line of the Northern Pacific. The Montana Improvement Company is composed of a syndicate of capitalists living at various cities in the Northwest. It was organized about a year ago with an alleged capital of $2,000,000, for the purpose of manufacturing building material, with the chief mills in Montana and Idaho. Agencies have been established at all points of any importance along the road east and west, and a vast amount of material is shipped as far as Salt Lake. The business has been conducted on a large scale and from what we can learn the enterprise has been a success from the very start. D. W. Small is a resident of Walla Walla, and one of the pioneers of that city. He has been in the lumber business for a number of years and has been very fortunate in all of his enterprises. He is now operating saw mills in Idaho and Montana. He sets forth that the Montana Improvement Company entered into a contract with him in which he was to furnish a certain stipulated amount of lumber. That the corporation only took a small portion of the total quantity and that his loss therefrom equals $80,000, the sum for which he sues. The whole case is a civil procedure, but the prominence of the parties and the amount involved is such as to awaken considerable interest. The managers of the corporation are not of the stuff to tamely submit and give up without a struggle, and the independent tenacity is not lacking in the composition of the plaintiff, so that it is probable that the proceedings thus instituted will lead to a protracted legal war, the end of which is beyond the ken of man, although we hope the trouble may yet be amicably adjusted.

ON A TRAIL.

A Couple of Ministers Bent on Painting the Town Carmine.

Possessing all of the good and bad auxiliaries of a city, Spokane Falls presents an inviting field for the gentle cowboy and the tough nut from away down to come in, spend his money freely and have one of those high old times that are generally followed by a stiff headache and a black eye or contusions of other portions of the anatomy. Yet it is not often that the opportunity for a grand spread is taken advantage of or if it is the participants go on the quiet, and if an injury is sustained or inflicted it does not become publicly known. However, a sustained and unpleasant consequence occurred Wednesday morning. Information was conveyed to Marshal Hyde that a couple of men, laboring under the stimulation of gin, were in possession of the premises of a house of ill-fame, on Front street, and were making themselves conspicuously obnoxious by using the yard as a pistol range, shooting into the building and aiming murderous threats. Marshal Hyde and officer Warren at once repaired to the scene, and came upon them just as one of the men fired at the target. Hyde had his revolver in hand, and ordered the fellow to give up his weapon. The young man, who was stooping down at the time, sprang to his feet, and with an oath, demanded Hyde's authority. The officer quietly informed him. The cowboy pointed his gun at Hyde and swore that he would not be taken. Quick as lightning Hyde struck the belligerent desperado on the head with the pistol, and both officers closed on him, Warren having disarmed the other fellow. The plucky cowboy fought out of the yard on to the street, fortunately without inflicting a particle of injury to the officers, where he was overpowered, but not until he had received severe injuries about the head, from which the blood flowed profusely. The obstreperous couple were locked up for several hours, and were taken before Judge Allen in the afternoon, when they were taught to respect the peace and dignity of the city by fines of $40 each. Both Marshal Hyde and officer Warren are deserving of praise for the nerve and bravery displayed in this arrest. For years Mr. Hyde has never shirked his duty, and the most desperate men have learned to respect his courage. Only for his coolness and cut-like agility he would have been handled roughly in this instance as the men were not of the class to give up without a struggle. With this class of officers on duty the rough element will find it healthy to go slow in the city.

Will Spokane Celebrate?

The query has often been propounded to us of late, "Will Spokane Falls celebrate the approaching 4th of July?" We are not prepared at the present writing to answer either negatively or affirmatively. It requires a vast amount of chinning, button-holing, explaining, committee work, and general rustling to get up a celebration, and in order to see the ball rolling a heavy draw must be made on the public stock of enthusiasm and the private purse. A celebration is always conducive of a large surplus of fun spread out over a large course of people, but the question afterwards arises does the sum total of sport balance the expense, worry and trouble incident to a public demonstration? Our voice has always been in favor of a worthy recognition of the great American holiday and this year we would be pleased to see the people of the Falls step forward and do the honors in good style. The celebration last year was one that will not soon be forgotten, and perhaps the citizens would prefer to rest on the laurels won the time used at least another year. However if the people at large feel that the bird should do its screeching in this place we say let him screech. Furthermore if a celebration is considered indispensable it is high time that preparations should be commenced for carrying out a project of the kind successfully. A 4th of July hurrah cannot be carried out without a big amount of work, and as the very best of committees are generally more or less dilatory it behooves those desirous of taking stock in the show to gather together, form their plans and commence pushing. If it is decided to celebrate let it be in a manner befitting the town in which we live, and if it be carried on upon that scale the commemoration will in every respect be ahead of any similar demonstration ever witnessed in the upper country. To celebrate, or not to celebrate, that is the question, and it is one that wants to be answered quick and in a manner not to be mistaken.

An Oddity.

Perhaps many of our readers have observed on the streets several days this week a peculiar looking personage moving aimlessly about as though time hung heavily on his hands and he did not know exactly what to do with himself. Short in stature, with a swinging gait, sharp, roving eyes, clean cut features, a grayish beard and mustache, as if sprinkled with chalk, and a tatterdemalion as regards raiment, his oddity of appearance combined with his independence of manner is such as generally attracts at least the momentary notice of the passer-by. This is Hazlett, the "Pilgrim," the roaming print, who is known in every printing office from San Diego to Victoria and from Denver to San Francisco. His age is problematical, but he has grown hoary wandering from one point to another. He set type in the Northwest years and years ago, and looks tough enough to live to set type over the same course years and years hence. He has been a wanderer up and down the face of the earth. He has tramped across the continent several times. He has measured the distance on foot between every town on the coast, a day here and a day there. He can name almost every journalist in the land, and generally speaking is treated with leniency among the craft. He will be here today, and a year hence he will be seen as securely as though he had only been out for a lunch. His face is as expressive as the sphynx. He never smiles and seldom asks a question. When at work he is a correct, steady printer, but on account of his unreliable habits, which may be more in the suspicion against the man than the actual facts, he finds it hard to get more than a few days work in a place. He might continue steady if he had regular employment; but for the past decade that experiment has never been tried. He is a victim to an appetite that has carried away many a better man, and it is evident that the refrain of his future, as it has been in the past, will be tramp, tramp, tramp. His life has been one continual round of change if not of pleasure. One winter he will be met with wading through the snows and shivering in the Arctic blasts of the far north, the next toiling through orange groves and vine-clad hills of southern California. He has no home, no friends, no kindred, at least on this side of the mountains. He spurs a meal of victuals to-day not knowing where the next is coming from. His career has been in a measure eventful, and the monotony of his roving is frequently broken by hair breadth escapes, not to mention little difficulties in which he becomes involved wherein a star attached to the left breast of an officious individual becomes mixed up, and interrupts the even tenor of his peculiar way. His existence is aimless, all ambition smothered long ago, without a ray of hope for the future to brighten his pathway. He never seems down-hearted, though it would be impossible to judge of his inner thoughts on account of his habitual taciturnity and stoicism. Perhaps he has undergone more privation and hardship, than any man in the country. Of course no one is to blame for this state of affairs but himself, and for that reason he has little sympathy from the members of the craft. He was at one time arrested on suspicion of being Black Bart, the wizard highwayman of California; we have known him to have several narrow escapes from frightful deaths; and but a short time ago he was examined at Walla Walla on the charge of insanity. His adventures up and down the coast would fill a volume. The Pilgrim is a queer case. He never has any particular aim in view, and is never going to any given point. Just drifting backwards and forwards, knowing not where he may secure the next bed and caring less. Yet for all of his eccentricities, oddities and quiddities there is nothing criminal in "Pilgrim." We have known him for years, and never knew him to commit even the most trivial crime. He is never quarrelsome, and as far as our observation goes is as honest as the day is long. In the office, when himself, he is quiet, willing, industrious, and true as steel. If he would keep steady he would be a valuable man in a print shop, but that "P" stands out like an unsurmountable barrier. He leaves here to go on, on, on, without an object, nor without an aim. And so will drift until at last he stands upon the shores of the great unknown, cut down prematurely among strangers, far from the home of his childhood, with here and there an old type who may express a regret over a wasted and mispent life that might have under proper combinations and conditions been a pleasure to himself and a joy to those about him.

Spokane Falls should be justly proud of her Journals. The REVIEW and Chronicle are Journals that keep alive the interests of the people, and by their united efforts one of the busiest and liveliest cities of the coast is fast assuming such proportions that she will command the trade of this whole interior country.
