Dead Eyes that Bear Witness.

There is a well-worn story of the conviction of a murderer having been attained by the circumstance that a recognizable image or likeness was found impressed upon the victim's eye, after death.

But the conceptions of fancy in one age often become the facts of discovery in another. Within a few weeks a patient German has announced and exhibited some startling experiments that bring the eye-picturing story within the limits of possibility.

Obviously under more delicate treatment the eye could be made to tell the story of fainter impressions. The eyes of human victims may yet bear testimony in courts of law, when murders are on trial.

The opened tomb of a Greek hero may bear witness to the last process within its walls before it was closed from the light.

A WITTY PROFESSOR.—A certain witty professor in the Michigan University had always succeeded in having the best of his scholars whenever a practical joke was attempted at his expense.

Cows Eat in Proportion to Weight.

At the St. Lawrence Dairyman's Association, General Curtis made the point in favor of the short horn cow, that she was such a perfect digester of food that she did not eat as much in proportion to size and yield of milk, as the Ayrshire or Jersey.

Whipping Horses.—In his work on the "Education of the Horse," Prof. Wagner says: I would caution those who train or use horses against exciting the will of the animal.

OVER-EATING.—If the food is wisely chosen there is not much danger of over-eating. Dr. Beard says: It is a fallacy to suppose that people as a rule, eat too much, and that most of the diseases of the world come from over-eating.

Eelskin Dresses.

Oliver Logan writes from London to the San Francisco Call: If the fashion plates which I see in the illustrated papers of New York are an exact representation of what the fair of that lively metropolis are wearing, I must believe that one of the most curious eccentricities ever devised has not yet come in vogue there.

But now, not only is the bustle a thing of horror, but even the necessary underclothing is considered de trop. To lengthen the waist far beyond its natural proportions, a stiff webbing of elastic is fastened to the stays to the depth of half a foot; and to this, at first, narrow skirts were buttoned.

Some ladies have had regular stage tights made in thick webbing, and over these they wear nothing, but the outer-dress under-kirts being simulated by pleated ruffles of white muslin, sewn to the edge of the dress which is then tied back till the woman within is shackled almost like a convict in a chain gang.
