The Campaign Managers of the Republicans.

The campaign managers of the Republicans are saying, through the organs, that the party has tried and convicted its violators of law.

The Great Moral Idea Party.

About a month ago, we read the Ohio Republican State platform, and concluded that it was the thinnest political literature yet promulgated by the party of great moral ideas and advanced wisdom.

The stereotyped and venerable palaver is "Our grand results." The first achievement is "our population has grown from 30,000,000 to 50,000,000."

They didn't put enough of it in Ohio creeks, however, to secure to that party, the counting of the next electoral vote.

They will do it in Pennsylvania, New York and Indiana. Perhaps few will care to impeach individuals in the Republican party, but as a political organization, it is the party of promises, the party of "boasters," the party of consolidation, the party that is determined to rule or ruin.

The November Elections.

Twenty seven States will hold elections on the seventh of next month. New York, Pennsylvania and Indiana of these, attract the most attention.

A villainous smell proceeds from the morgue department of the post office in Washington, where half a dozen million dead letters have been opened.

Officials in the Treasury at Washington tell us they fear there will be a scarcity of currency during the latter part of this month.

The Republican campaign managers are flooding the country with short squibs, to be copied by the small fry papers, setting forth the purity of that party;

FRIENDS of the Hon. J. H. Mitchell will be pleased to know that he intends to continue his extensive law practice in Portland and will make Oregon his home.

What Ails the Republican Party?

The San Francisco Bulletin asks this question, and then proceeds to give its answer. We give a part of it here; considering it most excellent reading:

Of course, nobody takes the ground that a party can be run without machinery. There must be some organization to start things in motion at the proper time—to mass the party and lead it in the charge.

The Republican agility in jumping from one method of politics to another, has become monotonous to the rank and file, and added to the constant pattering out of all manner of shibboleths that have been raised as battle-flags for the last ten years.

Although generally spoken of, and considered as a new town, situated in a new country, the city of Walla Walla has a history covering nearly a quarter of a century.

DAYTON, W. T., Oct. 25, 1882.

ED. STATESMAN.—I got up this morning to see the comet, but wasn't in the same fix the young man was in Pomeroy a short time ago, not by a darned sight.

Next to the building boom in importance, seems to be the approaching election. The general impression among Democrats here, and I might say a respectable number of Republicans, is that Judge Burke will get a handsome majority in this county.

When we come down to politics in this county, I think the Democrats have decidedly the advantage. We have a ticket composed of honorable and capable men. Some of our nominees are men who have filled the offices to which they now seek to be re-elected.

It would take me too long to tell you of all the improvements that have been going on in our city since the fire last April, but will give them a more extensive notice in a future communication.

History of Walla Walla.

The proprietor of this paper called Monday week upon Col. Gilbert, at Portland, who is preparing the history of Walla Walla, and in mentioning the subject of early events and the difficulty with which they are obtained, accurately, it was suggested that some of them pertaining to this city should be published in the STATESMAN.

Then followed the naming and locating of a county seat, the organization of a recorder and three trustees, F. C. Warden, Samuel Baldwin, and Neil McGlinchey being selected for the latter position, and I. T. Rees for the former.

The town site was surveyed by H. H. Case, and the first lots taken were lot 5, block 13, by I. T. Rees, and lot 2, in the same block, by Edward Everts, both being recorded November 30, 1859.

These recorded entries of location are referred to as an evidence of this early survey, the original plat not having been preserved.

Having given the causes that led to, and circumstances that attended the establishment of a military head quarters on Mill creek, in 1856, the subsequent starting of a few trading posts, whose principal customers were Indians, the springing up around them of a small settlement, in 1858, the formation of the county of Walla Walla, and the selection of this point for the county seat, in 1859.

side of Main, on what would now be Third street. The same year R. Guichard, the present Probate Judge of Walla Walla county, together with William Kohlfanf, erected the first house in the place from boards, that contained a floor, windows of glass, with a door, and the usual appliances of a dwelling house, and it stood on what now would be the northwest corner of Third and Main streets.

What Other Newspaper Men Say. The Mountain Sentinel says: The largest piece of work on the Blue Mountains, with exceptions of the tunnel, now building, is a cut near the mouth of Meacham's creek.

The Olympia Transcript says: During the last ninety days about twenty home-steads have been taken in this county, more than has ever been done before in this length of time.

The Canadian Pacific Railroad is expected to be completed by the middle or close of 1883, and will not be far behind the Northern Pacific in making through connections.

During the past year 285 miles of railroad have been constructed by the Northern Pacific on its main line—183 miles from the east and 102 miles from the west.

Topeka, Kansas, is a highly moral, strictly temperance, but by no means an intelligently practical city. In addition to its other attractions, it is the proud possessor of fifty saloons, which do a thriving business notwithstanding the prohibitory law.

Somebody has been saying this about the city editor: Who is there in any town who does more for the community at large than the local editor of its local paper?

Work is progressing rapidly along the line of railroad from Umatilla to Baker City. The track is already laid to Pendleton, a distance of 43 miles from Umatilla, and the grading completed about 45 miles further, or nearly to the summit of the Blue Mountains.

The Oregon Construction Company are the contractors for this work, and the contract is perhaps the largest one ever entered into by private individuals in that state.
