THERE is now between six and seven hundred millions of dollars in the national treasury. Yet business is stagnant in the east; the farmers of Dakota are in poverty and without the wherewith to get grain for seeding; the laboring men of San Francisco are crying out for bread, and the stringency of the money market continues to effect business in all quarters.

THE WALLA WALLA Union says that John L. Wilson has stoned for his "coquetting" with democracy by securing the appointment of a "true republican" in the place of Adams, who was commissioned register of the Spokane land office by Cleveland. Coquetting is a very mild term to apply to one who was so active in democratic councils and the leading local dispenser of democratic patronage.

TACOMA Record: The first year of the Harrison administration shows a close shave upon abolition's failure. Outside of the perfunctory work of the head of a political machine which never aims to elevate the public service through the selection of officials of a superior character, grandfather's son has done practically nothing. No special thing in the line of statesmanship is noticeable, and the best that can be said of the administration is that its mediocrity is not calculated to excite the public mind for the next three years, when Matt. Quay's "compromise" will seek the shades of private life, possibly to engage in pastoral pursuits as a Rutherford B.

TRAIN lectured in Tacoma to a house the receipts of which amounted to nearly five thousand dollars. The people who listened to him were edified. That was well. Manager Hadebaugh should then have housed him in one of his portables until the time for his sailing. Instead of doing this he allowed him to lecture the second and third time. Train does not wear well, and those who were enthusiastic over the first lecture and attended both of the others were greatly surprised and their ardor dropped from the glow to the gloaming. Now, should Train circle the globe in sixty days, or even make the circuit in less time than Nellie Bly, it would be a great card for Tacoma and the state. Concede that this desired end is attained, and then what is to become of Train? Is he to linger in Tacoma? Is he to linger in the state? It is to be hoped not. If he succeeds in demonstrating that we are on the short cut around the world we do not wish to seem ungrateful; but would not the drawbacks of his remaining with us be greater than the benefits which would accrue from his success? THE HERALD believes they would.

AN eastern Washington paper, commenting recently upon the fact that a well known young man had gone east to get married, asked the pertinent question: "What is the matter with the Washington girls?" The answer to this enquiry is to be found in last year's census returns. The girls are not here. The heavy immigration to Washington during the past few years has made it pre-eminently a man's state, and the men outnumbered the women two to one. Last year the number of men was 65,281 and of women 32,528. In every county except Chehalis the men predominate. Chehalis had 2127 men and 2362 women. In King county there were 12,148 males and 6582 females over 21 years of age; in Walla Walla county 6804 men and 4503 women; in Spokane county 9775 men and 4501 women, and in the other counties the figures preserved the same proportion. Pierce county made no returns. The total number of married people was 78,996, single people 114,005. In all the counties except Douglas, King, Kittitas, San Juan, Stevens, Skamania and Thurston the single people predominated. King county accounted for 14,574 doubles and 10,590 singles; Pierce for 9164 doubles and 10,806 singles; Spokane for 9164 doubles and 16,003 singles, and so on throughout the state. Young men and young women, come to Washington.

INTRICACIES OF THE TARIFF.

THE farmers of Kansas, says the Philadelphia Record, are slowly rising to an appreciation of the fact that they cannot profitably sell their corn to Mexico under a tariff policy which excludes the lead ore of Mexico from this country. Accordingly the farmers of Kansas are beginning to call upon their senators and representatives in congress to vote against the proposed exclusion of Mexican ores by a prohibitory duty. At the same time the Colorado silver miners declare that they contributed $100,000 to the Harrison campaign fund with the understanding that Mexican ores should be prohibited; and they insist that the bargain shall be kept in good faith. With the double fear of losing Kansas voters and Colorado money, the republican managers are in a dilemma in regard to the lead ore tariff.

HUNTINGTON'S R. R. RECORD.

Omaha World-Herald: Every railroad owned by the Southern Pacific Company was built out of the assets of the Central Pacific company, which assets would have gone a long way towards paying the debt due the Government had they been properly applied. The old Central Pacific was denuded of its rolling-stock to equip its southern rival, to which its traffic was arbitrarily diverted in order to produce the appearance of poverty in which it now presents itself to congress. In addition to all this the four original owners of the road, who had nothing in the beginning, and their heirs, now boast private fortunes aggregating $200,000,000, all of which comes out of the funds of the road and was applicable to the payment of its debts. And all these facts are abundantly set forth in the report of the commission appointed by President Cleveland and published in due course. No such high-handed robbery was ever attempted in this or any other country, and that it should be condoned by congress by the passage of such a bill as is now reported is a disgrace to the American people.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Another chapter of scandal and disgrace is furnished by our legislators at Olympia, and Representative Brown, of Spokane, is disgraced by a broken nose, the result of a blow of the fist by Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms Eshman. Owing to the lax methods of conducting the business of the house, Brown and others were absent Tuesday and some disgusted member asked for a call of the house to teach the recalcitrant one a lesson. The sergeant-at-arms was ordered to arrest the absent member and then there was a row which terminated in Brown being reprimanded. Smarting under this stigma he went to Eshman and demanded $5 which the latter had borrowed. Ugly words ensued and Eshman struck the blow which will mar Brown's beauty for some time to come. The committee to whom the matter was referred has recommended the summary dismissal of Eshman.

Harry Baer, of Spokane Falls, who shot and killed "Big Mac" McCrossen in January, has been indicted by the grand jury for murder in the second degree. The murder occurred in front of Dutch Jake's saloon, which is owned by Goets and Baer. At the time the coroner's jury rendered a verdict of justifiable homicide, but citizens took the case up and the verdict was reopened, with the result that Baer was held to await the action of the grand jury. It is possible the indictment for murder could have been secured but for the peculiar circumstance. When the case came before the coroner the second time, Attorney Graves was asked to draw up the verdict of the jury. He did so and held him for murder in the second degree. It afterwards transpired that Graves was Baer's attorney. The grand jury could not go back of the record.

The governor is reported to contemplate an extra session if the legislature does not pass such bills as he considers necessary. Just what those are he does not point out. It would be impossible to hold the legislature together now. Some of them will go home on Saturday, governor or no governor. If an extra session be called it will probably be for a month from now.

The lower house of congress has passed a bill cutting down the fees in this state to be paid to register and receivers for entries and final proofs. It will reduce the price of pre-emption entries from $3 to $1.50, homesteads from $22 to $10 in railroad limits and $10 to $4 outside, and the price of taking testimony from 22 1/2 to 15 cents per folio.

Rev. J. T. Eshelman exhorted at Ellensburg last Sunday. He struck a splendid field, and quite a number of hardened sinners were gathered into the fold. Ellensburg, strange as it may seem, has struck a moral vein, and among many other wonderful things 125 conversions have been made at the Methodist revival.

A jail delivery occurred at Ellensburg on the 15th inst., at which James Washington, a maitre, indicted for the murder of a colored boy, and Frank Enoch, held for the stabbing of Frank Fisher on the 29th of December, made their escape. A reward of $200 is offered for the capture of the missing men.

A Portland paper gets off the following on the Washington legislature: "An Olympia liquor dealer advertised, the other day, for 10,000 whisky flasks. Two bright young urchins rushed to the back windows of the capitol building and filled the order before sundown that night."

Bismarck is evidently up in arms. He has deposited all of his stars, crosses and medals in a bank, donned his frock coat and retired from Berlin. His son, Count Herbert Bismarck, has resigned the imperial secretaryship of foreign affairs.

The blockade on the Oregon & California road has at last been raised. This was probably the longest blockade that ever happened to any American railroad, and cost the company about a quarter of a million of dollars.

A family in Whatcom, not liking the taste of the water they were drawing from their ninety foot deep well, sent a man down to inspect its depth. The well was in a tolerably good condition, but a dead Indian was found at the bottom.

A large wooden building belonging to Stetson & Post was burned at Seattle on Friday night last. The remains of two men and a woman, recent arrivals from Arkansas, were found in the ruins.

Judge N. T. Caton, well known by the members of the bar and other citizens of Yakima, was "held up" at Sprague one night last week and relieved of what money he had on his person.

The appropriations for this session of the legislature amount to over seven hundred thousand dollars, which, added to the old territorial indebtedness, figures up more than a million.

Major General George Crook, commander of the department of the Missouri, died suddenly of heart failure at the Grand Pacific hotel, Chicago, March 21.

The people of Anacortes paid the Oregonian $2000 for the privilege of publishing its news-boom dispatches in that paper for a period of three months.

The tide lands bill passed the senate on Friday last just as it came from the house. The vote stood nineteen ayes to fourteen nays.

Governor Ferry has signed the bill empowering counties to contract indebtedness and issue bonds for the same.

The Coming Great War.

Jules Simon, an able and most distinguished Frenchman, who has been appointed a delegate to the Berlin labor conference, says he has no faith that any agreement can be reached on any of the important features of this grave question. When recently interviewed as to the future of the socialistic movement, he replied: "I look forward with grave apprehension to the effect upon Europe of this present labor agitation. Already I can hear the mutterings of what must be the struggle of the future—the bitter struggle between the many and the few; between the toiling millions who have thus far suffered silently and those who have made them suffer; between luxury and starvation; between misery and wealth. No human power can avert this struggle, but human folly may do much to hasten its approach. I shall not see it, but the day is coming when the autocratic powers of Europe will be forced to unite against the united social army and to stand or fall together."

Overproduction of Eggs.

It is painful to learn that the last example of pernicious activity in the line of ruinous overproduction is presented by the hens of the nation. Undeterred by the great commercial industries engaged in the selling of pickled eggs at thirty cents a dozen, the American hens have been misled by the mild weather into turning out a supply of fresh eggs that has knocked the pickled and artificial egg business into a condition closely approximating panic. We have not heard that any complaint of this state of affairs is made by consumers of eggs, but the proprietors of more antique stocks are plainly convinced that the interests of the nation will be sadly injured if the public gets too cheap and too fresh eggs. A movement to put the hens into a trust which will restrict the industrious fowls to two eggs per week is the obvious remedy according to the economic policy of the day.

He Was Too Crude.

She was from Boston; he was a Yakiman. "You have traveled a great deal in the west, have you not, Miss Beacon?" "Oh, yes, indeed. In California, New Mexico, Arizona, and the splendid Washington."

"Have you seen the Cherokee strip?" There was a painful silence for a few moments but finally she looked over her glasses at him and said: "In the first place, sir, I deem your question extremely rude, and in the second place, you might have been more refined in your language by asking me if I had ever seen the Cherokee diorite."

Congressman Wilson a Merry Maker

Washington, D. C., telegram: "Representative Wilson, of Washington, jumped into the arena to-day in the pension legislation, and while he created a great deal of amusement and laughter, did not say anything. He thought that General Spaulding, of New York, had referred to him, and in order to get in his reply was set upon. Mr. Spaulding called him 'my son' and 'my boy,' but would not allow the Washington man a chance to reply. 'Mr. Wilson was loaded, but did not go off, and his efforts and Spaulding's remarks convulsed the house. The new members sometimes have to suffer.'"

CHAPTER XIV.

The group that gathered there a moment later is as interested a party as the central figures are interesting. Unable to get her left foot to the ground and still encircled by Perry's arm, Miss Maitland stands leaning heavily on his breast. She is very pale for a moment, partly from exhaustion, partly from pain, for there was no time to free her foot from the stirrup, and the ankle is severely wrenched. Nolan, riderless now and cast loose, stands with lowered head and heaving flanks, a sympathetic but proudly heroic look on his face; he knows he has played his part in that rescue. The huge English hunter is plunging in misery among the mounds a few yards back, his fore leg broken. One of the troopers has seized his bridle, and another is unstrapping the heavy English saddle. "Splendidly done!" says the colonel, as he trots carefully up, casting a glance at the fallen cause of all the mischief; "but if that saddle had been one of those three pronged abominations he couldn't have galloped to the stream for water, and the colonel lifts Mrs. Sprague from her saddle, and together they advance to offer sympathy and aid. Mrs. Lawrence follows as quickly as she can pick her way among the prairie dog holes. Dana has deserted Mrs. Belknap, and she alone remains mounted within all these others through about the two who stand there for the moment, clinging to each other. And now Gladys Maitland has raised her head; blushes of shame and confusion triumph over pallor and pain; she strives to stand alone, but Perry bids her desist. The moment she sees Mrs. Sprague's sweet, womanly, sympathetic face her eyes are filled with comfort and her heart goes out to her. Most reluctantly Perry resigns his prize to the arms that open to receive her, and then come the wondering exclamations of some, and the brief, breathless explanations.

"Don't try to talk yet," pleads Mrs. Sprague. "We are only too glad it was so worse."
"Indeed, I'm not hurt," answers Gladys, bravely—"only a little wrenched, but," and she laughs nervously, trying to carry it off with all the pluck and spirit of her race, "it would have been what we call a 'nasty cropper' at home if—and her eyes turn shyly yet with a world of gratitude to his—"it had not been for Mr. Perry."
"Oh, then you know Mr. Perry?" exclaims Mrs. Sprague, with frank delight, and Mrs. Lawrence turns in rejoicing to look first in his glowing face, then at the dark beauty of Mrs. Belknap silently listening.
"Why, we had no idea!"—And she concludes irresolutely.
"Oh, yes, we met at the ranch—at home. I am Miss Maitland, you know; and that is my father's place. But we've only just come," she adds, with the woman's natural desire to explain to new found friends why and how it was that they had not met before. And then the group is joined by a bulky young Briton in the garb of a groom, though modified to suit the requirements of frontier life; he comes cantering to the scene all elbows and consternation; he gives a groan of dismay as sight of the prostrate hunter, but rides directly to his mistress. She is paling again now, and in evident pain, and Perry's face is a study as he stands, his eyes riveted upon her, but she tries to smile and reassure him.
"You'll have to ride to Durr—and there's no help for it—papa will have to be told. Let them send for me."
"Pardon me, Miss Maitland," interrupted Col. Brainerd. "You are almost under the walls of Fort Rossiter, and Dunraven is miles away. I have sent a swift horse for Dr. Quinn and a spring ambulance. We cannot let you go home, now that you are so near us, until you have had rest and proper care."
"Indeed we cannot, Miss Maitland," chimed in both ladies at a breath. "You are to come right to my house until you are fit to travel."
"I'm not very fit just now, certainly," she answers, with a faint smile; "but I can surely wait here until they send; 'twill not be more than an hour at most."
"It will be two hours—perhaps three—Miss Maitland," pleaded Perry, bending eagerly forward. "Do listen to our ladies!"
And "our ladies" prevailed. While Griggs went spluttering off to Dunraven with the sorrowful news, the strong arms of Perry and Graham lifted and bore their English captive to the shade of a clump of cottonwoods. Mrs. Sprague and Mrs. Lawrence managed to make a little couch for her as a temporary resort. Mrs. Belknap rode up and was formally introduced, then galloped away to Rossiter to send blankets for the picnic couch and see to the pillows of the ambulance. The colonel and Perry remained with the ladies and engaged their attention while Graham went back and sent two pistol bullets into the struggling hunter's brain, stilling his pain forever. Then came Dr. Quinn galloping like the wind down the familiar trail, chiding "Gladys" as though his rights to do so were a long established thing, and thereby setting Perry's teeth on edge, and, long before the call for afternoon stables was sounding, the fair daughter of Dunraven Ranch was housed within the walls of Rossiter and the "ice was broken." Perry had had the joy of helping carry her into Mrs. Sprague's coolest and coolest room. She had held forth her hand—such a long, white, beautiful hand—and let it rest in his while she said, "You know how impossible it is for me to tell you how I thank you, Mr. Perry," and he had simply bowed over it, long to say what he thought, but powerless to think of anything else, and then he had gone to his own quarters and shut himself in. Mrs. Sprague—miss her!—had invited him to call after tea, and he had totally forgotten the Lawrence's dinner when he said he would be only too glad to come. At the sounding of stable call his dark servant banged at the door and roused him from his reverie. He rose mechanically and went out into the broad sun shine, glancing first along the row to see how things were looking at the Sprague's and wishing with all his heart that they were somewhere within reach of a conservatory, that he might send a heaping box of fresh and dewy roses to that sacred room where she lay. How many a time, he thought, had he strolled into some odorous shop in the cities and bought a bunch of flowers, and carefully ordered out flowers by the cubic foot sent with his card to some one with whom he had danced the German the night before and never expected to see again! What wouldn't he give now for just a few of those wasted, faded, forgotten flowers! Stables that evening proved a sore trial to him.

When at last the men went swinging homeward in their white canvas frocks and Perry could return to his quarters to dress for his eagerly anticipated call, the first thing that met his eyes as he came in sight of officers' row was a huge, bulky covered traveling carriage in front of Sprague's. Two or three ladies were there at the gate. Mr. Even, the English man at the gate, was just mounting his horse; Dr. Quinn, too, was there and already in saddle; and before Perry could get half way across the parade, and just as the trumpets were sounding mess call for supper, the bulky vehicle started; the ladies waved their handkerchiefs and kissed their hands, and, escorted by Even and the adjutant with raised forage caps Gladys Maitland was driven slowly away and Mrs. Belknap stood there in the little group of ladies smiling sweetly upon him as he hastened towards them. For many a long day afterwards mess call always made him think of Mrs. Belknap's smile and Mrs. Belknap's smile of mess call. He shuddered at the sound of one or slight of the other.

It was Mrs. Sprague who stepped forward to greet him, her womanly heart filled with sympathy for the sentiment she suspected. She had to push by Mrs. Belknap to reach him; but, in this, no consideration of etiquette stood in the way.
"It couldn't be helped," she said, in low hurried tone, her kind eyes searching his, so clouded in the bitterness of his disappointment. "It couldn't be helped. The news of her accident—on something—brought on a seizure of some kind. Mr. Maitland was taken very ill and they sent for her. The manager came, and with him her old nurse, Mrs. Cowan, and Dr. Quinn said she could be moved without trouble; so she had to go. I hated to have her, too, for I've hardly had a word with her. Mrs. Belknap has been there most of the afternoon, even when she had a guest of her own just arrived, too." And Mrs. Sprague could not but show her vexation at this retro-spect.

Perry stood in silence, looking yearningly after the retreating vehicle. It would take him but a few minutes to hasten to stables and saddle Nolan; he could easily catch them before they had gone two miles; but there was parade and the colonel's adjutant, Mrs. Sprague stepped quickly towards him and spoke a few words in a low tone while Mrs. Belknap remained looking straight into Perry's eyes. Before the young fellow could gather himself, Col. Brainerd, as though in reply to a suggestion of Mrs. Sprague's, suddenly started, exclaiming, "Why, by all means!" and then called aloud:
"Oh! Perry, why not gallop down and overtake the Dunraven carriage and say good-by? Here's my horse all saddled now right in the yard. Take him and go! I would."

There was something so hearty and genial and sympathetic in the colonel's manner that Perry's face flushed despite his effort at nonchalance. The thought of seeing her again and hearing her sweet voice was a powerful incentive. He longed to go. The colonel's invitation was equivalent to an excuse from parade. There was no reason why he should not go. He was on the very point of thankfully accepting the tempting offer, when Mrs. Belknap's words arrested him. "Clear and cutting, but still so low that none but he could hear, she spoke:
"Take my word for it, you are not wanted, nor any other man, when Dr. Quinn is with her."
Perry's hesitation vanished. "Thank you, colonel, I believe I don't care to go," he answered, and, raising his cap to the ladies, turned on his heel and hurried to his quarters. Mrs. Belknap stood watching him one moment, then calmly rejoined the party at the gate.

"Well," said she, with the languid drawl that her regimental associates had learned to know so well, "this has been a day of surprises, has it not? Only fancy our having a beautiful English belle here within reach and never knowing it until today!"

"But you had a surprise of your own, had you not?" interposed Mrs. Sprague, who was still chafing over the fact that her lovely and dangerous neighbor should have so monopolized the guest she considered hers by prior right, and who meant to remind her thus publicly of the neglect of which she had been guilty.
"Mrs. Page, you mean?" responded Mrs. Belknap, with the same languid, imperturbable manner. "Yes; poor Jennie! She is always utterly used up after one of those long ambulance journeys, and can only take a cup of tea and go to bed in a darkened room. All she wants is to be let alone, she says, until she gets over it. I suppose she will sleep till noon and then be up half the night. You'll come in and see her, won't you? Au revoir!"
And so, calmly and gracefully and victoriously, the dark eyed dame withdrew, leaving her honest heart antagonized only the sense of exasperation and defeat.

It was full quarter of an hour after parade, and darkness was setting down on the garrison, when Capt. Lawrence's orderly tapped at the door of Mr. Perry's quarters, and, being bidden "Come in," pushed on to the sitting room, where he found that young officer plunged deep in an easy chair in front of the fireplace, his attitude one of profound dejection.
"Beg pardon, lieutenant," said the man, "Mrs. Lawrence and the captain's waitin' dinner for you."

CHAPTER XV.

WO days passed without event of any kind. Socially speaking, the garrison was enlivened by the advent of Mrs. Page, and everybody flocked to the headquarters in order to do her proper homage. When Perry called he asked Parke to go with him, and when the latter seemed ready to leave the former, disregarding a very palpable hint from the lady of the house, picked up his forage cap and went likewise. For two days the one subject under constant discussion at the post was the event of Mrs. Maitland's sudden appearance, her perilous run and her daring and skillful rescue. Everybody maintained that Perry ought to be a very proud and happy fellow to have been the hero of such an occasion; but it was very plain that Perry was neither proud nor anything like happy. No one had ever known him so silent and cast down. The strength with which Lawrence had helped matters very little.

In brief, this was about all the captain could tell him, and it was all hearsay evidence at best. The officers of the Eleventh and their ladies had, with a few exceptions, taken a dislike to Dr. Quinn before Belknap and Lawrence with their companies of infantry had been ordered to Fort Rossiter. The feeling was in full blast when they arrived, and during the six or eight months they served together the infantry people heard only one side of the story—that of the Eleventh—for the doctor never condescended to discuss the matter. After he was forbidden to leave the post by the commanding officer, and after the announcement of the "blockade" of Dunraven, it was observed that signals were sometimes made from the ranch at night: a strong light thrown from a reflector was flashed three times and then withdrawn. Next it was noted, by an enterprising member of the guard, that these signals were answered by a light in the doctor's window; and when he mounted his horse and rode away down the valley of the Monea, he was always back at sick call; and, if any one told the commanding officer of his disobedience of orders, it was not done until so near the departure of the Eleventh that the doctor was not afterwards accused of being caught in the act. Things would undoubtedly have been brought to a crisis had the Eleventh been allowed to remain.

Now as to the story about Mrs. Quinn and her going. It was observed during the winter that she was looking very badly, and the story went the rounds in the Eleventh that she was stung and suffering because of her husband's conduct. Unquestionably there was some fair censure at Dunraven who lured him from his own fireside. She had no intimacies among the ladies. She was proud and silent. It did not seem to occur to them that she was resentful of their dislike of her husband. They were sure she was "biting" because of his neglect—or worse. When, therefore, without word of warning, she suddenly took her departure in the spring, there was a gasp of loving cronies in the garrison; all doubts were at an end; she had left him and taken her children with her.

"The more I think of it," said Lawrence, "the more I believe the whole thing capable of explanation. The only thing that puzzles me now is that Quinn hides anything from your colonel, who is one of the most courteous and considerate men I ever served with. Perhaps he has told him by this time; we don't know. Perhaps he thought he might be of the same stamp as his predecessor, and was waiting to find out before he made his confession. As to Mrs. Quinn going away when she did, it may have been simply that her health was suffering, she needed change, and went with his full advice and by his wish, and he simply feels too much contempt for garrison gossip to explain. Very probably he knows nothing of the stories and theories in circulation; I'm sure I did not until a few weeks ago. You know, Perry, there are some men in garrison who hear and know everything, and others who never hear a word of scandal."

But Perry was low in his mind. He could not forget Quinn's sudden appearance; his calling her Gladys; and then he had the thought that it was Quinn who saw him having that confounded tender interview with Mrs. Belknap. Was there ever such a streak of ill luck as that! No doubt the fellow had told her about it! Perry left Lawrence's that night very little comforted, and only one gleam of hope did he receive in the two days that followed. Mrs. Sprague joyfully beckoned him on Wednesday afternoon to read him a little note that had just come from Miss Maitland. Her father had been very ill, she wrote; his condition was still critical; but she sent a word of thanks to her kind entertainer at Rossiter, and these words: "I was sorry not to be able to see Mr. Perry again. Do not let him think I have forgotten, or will be likely to forget, the service he—and Nolan—did me."
Of Dr. Quinn he saw very little. With the full consent and knowledge of Col. Brainerd, the doctor was spending a good deal of time at Dunraven now, attending to Mr. Maitland. Indeed, there seemed to be an excellent understanding between the commandant and his medical officer, and it was known that they had had a long talk together. Upper class in the garrison were still agitated with chat and conjecture about Gladys Maitland and her strange father; Perry was still tortured with questions about his one visit to Dunraven whenever he was so incautious as to appear in public; but all through "the quarters," everywhere among the rank and file, there was a subject that engrossed all thoughts and all conversation about Gladys Maitland—the approaching court martial of Sgt. Leary and of Trooper Kelly.

As a result of his investigation, Capt. Stryker had preferred charges against these two men—the one for leading and the other for being accessory to the assault on his stable grooms. Gwynne was still at the hospital, though rapidly recovering from his injuries. Not a word had he said that would implicate or accuse any man; but Stryker's knowledge of his soldier's, and his clear insight into human motive and character, were such that he had readily made up his mind as to the facts in the case. He felt sure that Leary and some of the Celtic members of his company had determined to go down to Dunraven and "have it out" with the hated Britons who had so affronted and abused them the night of Perry's visit. They knew they could not get their horses by fair means, for Gwynne was above suspicion. He was English, too, and striving to shield his countrymen from the threatened vengeance. They therefore determined, in collusion with Kelly, to lure him outside the stables, bind and gag him, get their horses, having one rifled Gwynne of the keys, ride down to the ranch, and, after having a Donnybrook fair on the premises, get back to Rossiter in plenty of time for reveille and stables. No sentries were posted in such a way as to interfere with them, and the plan was feasible enough but for one thing. Gwynne had made most gallant and spirited resistance, had fought the whole gang like a tiger, and they had been unable to overpower him before the noise had attracted the attention of the sergeant of the guard and some of the men's quarters. An effort, or comma, was made to shoot the assaulting party were from without, but it was futile, and Stryker's cross-questioning among the men had convinced them that he knew all about the matter. There was only one conclusion, therefore, that Gwynne must have "given them away," as the troopers expressed it.

Despite the fact that he had been assaulted and badly beaten, and he wore a patch over one eye. He resumed charge of the stables in the afternoon, after a brief conversation with his captain, and was superintending the issue of forage, when Perry entered to inspect the stalls of his platoon. Nolan was being led out by his groom at the moment, and, grieved by his tapering ears at sight of his master and thrust his lean muzzle to receive the caress of the hand he knew so well. Perry stopped him and carefully and critically examined his knees, feeling down to the fetlocks with searching fingers for the faintest symptom of knot or swelling in the tendons that had played their part so thoroughly in the drama of Monday. Satisfied, apparently, he rose and bestowed a few hearty pats on the glossy neck and shoulder, and then was surprised to find the stable sergeant standing close beside him and regarding both him and horse with an expression that arrested Perry's attention at once.

"Feeling all right again, sergeant?" he asked, thinking to recall the non-commissioned officer to his senses.
"Almost, sir. I'm a trifle stiff yet. Anything wrong with Nolan, sir?"
"Nothing. I gave him rather a tough run the other day—had to risk the prairie dog holes—and, though I felt no jar then, I've watched carefully ever since to see that he was not wrenched. I wish you would keep an eye on him too, will you?"
There was no answer. Perry had been looking over Nolan's haunches as he spoke, and once more turned to the sergeant. To his astonishment, Gwynne's lips were twitching and quivering, his hands, ordinarily held in the rigid pose of the English service—extended along the thigh—were clinching and working nervously, and something suspiciously like a tear was creeping out from under the patch. Before Perry could recover from his surprise the sergeant suddenly regained his self control, hastily raised his hand in salute, saying something he articulated in reply, and turned sharply away, leaving his lieutenant gazing after him in much perplexity.

"That night, just after tattoo roll call, when a little group of officers was gathered at the colonel's gate, they were suddenly joined by Dr. Quinn, who came from the direction of the stable where he kept his horse in rear of his own quarters. Col. Brainerd greeted him warmly and inquired after his patient at Dunraven. Every one noted how grave and subdued was the tone in which the doctor answered:
"He is a very sick man, colonel, and it is hard to say what will be the result of this seizure."
"You may want to go down again, doctor, if that be the case—before we call to-morrow, I mean; and you had better take one of my horses. I'll tell my man to have one in readiness."
"You are very kind, sir. I think old Brian will do all the work needed. But I would like to go down at reveille, as we have no men in hospital at all now. And, by the way, is Mr. Perry here?"
"I am here," answered Perry coldly. He was leaning against the railing, rather away from the group, listening intently, yet unwilling to meet or hold conversation with the man he conceived to be so inimical to his every hope and interest.
"Mr. Perry," said the doctor, pleasantly, and utterly ignoring the coldness of the young fellow's manner. "Mr. Maitland has asked to see you; and it would gratify him if you would ride down in the morning."
"Even in the darkness Perry feared that all would see the flush that leaped to his face. Summoned to Dunraven Ranch by his father, with a possibility of seeing her! It was almost too sweet to thrill! He could give no reply for a moment, and an awkward silence fell on the group until he chokingly answered: "I shall be glad to go. What time?"
"Better ride down early. Never mind breakfast. Miss Maitland will be glad to give you a cup of coffee, I fancy."
And Perry felt as though the fence had been taken to waiting. He made no answer, striving to regain his composure, and then the talk went on. It was Stryker who was talking now:
"Has the ring been found, doctor?"
"No! That is a most singular thing, and one that worries the old gentleman a great deal. It had a history; it belonged to Mrs. Maitland's father, who was from Ireland—indeed, Ireland was her country, as it was my father's—and that ring she had reset for her son Archie and gave it to him when he entered service with the Lancers. It was sent home with his watch and other property from South Africa—for he died there—and old Maitland always wore it afterwards. Archie was the last of three sons; and it broke his heart."
"And the ring was lost the night of Perry's adventure there?" asked the colonel.
"Yes, Mr. Perry remembers having seen it on his hand when the old gentleman first came down to receive him. It was missed afterwards, and could easily have slipped off at any time, for his fingers were withered with age and ill health. They have searched everywhere, and could find nothing of it. It could easily have rolled off the veranda on to the grass during his excitement at the time of the row, and somebody may have picked it up—either among the ranch men or among the troopers."
"I hate to think that any of our men would take it," said the colonel after a pause.
"I do not think any of them would, with the idea of selling it," said Stryker; "but here is a case where it was picked up, possibly, as one of the spoils of war. I have had inquiry made throughout the troop, but with no result so far. Do you go down again to-night, doctor?"
"Not if I can avoid it. I am going now to try and sleep, and will not ride down till daylight unless signaled for. Good night, colonel; good night, all!"
Unless signaled for! Instinctively Perry eddied closer to Lawrence, who had stood a silent listener to the conversation, and Lawrence turned and saw him and knew the thought that must be uppermost in his mind. There was a moment of perfect silence, and then Lawrence spoke:
"Does anybody know what the signal is?"
"Certainly," said Col. Brainerd, promptly. "He has explained the whole thing to me. Those were signals for him that we saw the night you were all on my gallery. It was an arrangement devised by their old nurse—who came up with the carriage for Miss Maitland the other day. She had a regular old fashioned headlight and reflector, and when Mr. Maitland was so ill as to need a doctor, used to notify Quinn in that way. He sometimes failed to see it, and I have given orders today that the guard should wake him when it is seen hereafter."
"Then that was what those mysterious night lights meant that we have heard so much about during the last three weeks?" asked Mr. Dana.
"Certainly," answered Brainerd. "What on earth did anybody suppose they meant?"
To this there was no response for a moment. Then Lawrence burst out laughing.

CLEOPATRA RESTING PLACE

The Tomb of the Beautiful Soreness of the Nile.

Present Condition of this Interesting Remains of the Days of Long Ago.

The authorities at the British museum, says the Manchester Courier, are reported to have received information that a find of extraordinary interest has recently been made on the site of some recent excavations in Egypt.

The announcement has naturally been received with a great deal of interest by archaeologists in England. An article in the Daily Telegraph says of the announcement: That it is at any rate the tomb of an Egyptian person of quality is evident enough from its imposing appearance.

Of late we have had much too many displays of that antiquarian zeal which, when unaccompanied by its due qualification from the feelings of human pity and reverence, is apt to claim unscrupulous indulgence. Within the last year or two we have seen, and we are sorry to say, under high ecclesiastical sanction, violence done to the remains of a great English prelate, venerated by his countrymen of the Protestant persuasion, and actually canonized by the Catholic church.

It is hardly probable, we fear, that the formal opening of the tomb will settle any question in which the world is keenly interested in connection with "The Serpent of Old Nile." Far unless the queen, if it be the queen, should resemble that mysterious and from the feminine point of view, fortunate tenant of the vault of St. Mary Woodcock, the explorers will not be in position to pronounce any authoritative opinion on Cleopatra's beauty.

The philosopher of the dictum that if Cleopatra's nose had been the eighth of an inch longer the whole history of the world might have been changed, is a legend, perhaps, in rather a gratuitous assumption. Such an observation presupposes that a departure from our ideas of facial symmetry would have been recognized and deplored as such by Mark Antony, whereas, we suggest we know, it might have constituted in his view a positive addition to her charms.

When trade is dull you must hustle for business. Don't stand behind your counters and find fault. That won't bring in a single customer. Set your wits to work and see if you cannot do something that will attract attention and draw trade.

Probably there was something more about her than this—something which eluded Appian and Dion Cassius, and other reputable Dryadists of the time, but of which there are traces in Plutarch, and which Shakespeare, the careful student of Plutarch, seized upon with the true instinct of the poet.

A young man was fined $22 the other day for hugging a St. Louis girl. This was a terrible punishment for an act of charity.—Pioneer Transcript.

credit, has exercised greater power for the infatuation of the other sex than perhaps even the more orthodox and classical fancies of the Helens of history.

"Cleopatra, at any rate, succeeded in demonstrating her possession of a more potent wand of enchantment—judging by those whom she captivated—than any other mythical or historical heroine of the past. Helen's conquest, after all, and for all their important consequences, will not bear a moment's comparison with those of the Egyptian queen. Paris was a poor creature, in whatever way we consider him—not by any means remarkable either for bravery in the field or for ability in the council chamber; and, in fact, so far as can be ascertained, he was very much what an American would describe as a "no-account man," among his peers of windy Troy, Menelaus, perhaps—the petitioner—was hardly better.

Nothing, however, so forcibly illustrates her mastery over men as the story of her relations with Anthony. There is evidence that he saw her for the first time in Egypt when she was barely 15 years of age, and she was a woman verging upon 30 and charged with the crime of murdering her brother when she appeared before him again and bound him finally to her ear.

Ellensburg Register: Everybody in Ellensburg and Yakima knows Leigh B. Freeman who used to run the Washington Farmer at the latter place, and the anniversary of whose removal the good people of that city celebrate with much enthusiasm semi-annually.

A novel prayer-meeting took place last Friday night at Gibraltar, Washington, those present taking Almighty God to remove one L. B. Freeman, a public nuisance, from their midst.

When trade is dull you must hustle for business. Don't stand behind your counters and find fault. That won't bring in a single customer. Set your wits to work and see if you cannot do something that will attract attention and draw trade.

Traits in Women Liked by Men.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox, the sweetest, wisest, and most generally woman of the thousand that write for the public to-day, says:

In spite of the fact that "many men have many misgivings," and that individual tastes differ as greatly as features and tints, there are certain tastes which are essentially masculine the world over.

We have all often heard the expression, "Oh, she is just the sort of a woman that men like!" and we all feel, immediately, if secret, interest in the woman so referred to.

Men are the rulers of the world, and to please them is our aim and desire. Often, however, their tastes are so paradoxical that it would require a very good Medusa to respond to all their varied and contradictory ideas.

A man likes a woman to be capable of talking well at times, but he does not care for the garrulous girl. He likes to be listened to himself, and objects to the girl who monopolizes the conversation almost as much as to the one who does not talk at all.

A man likes modesty, but he is disgusted with mock prudery.

He secretly likes a slightly unconventional girl, but he is so sensitive to public opinion that he is afraid to openly show his liking for her unless she is well-grounded socially. And he is quick to censure if, she defies the proprieties, or violates absolute good form.

W. G.—The same.

C. T.—I will try some of it, I guess.

W. G.—Very well, sir. WITH you have it with or without?

C. T.—With or without what?

FREE QUARTERS FOR IMMIGRANTS.—North Yakima is preparing to care for her quota of new comers from Colorado, California and the east.

INCREASE OF ORCHARD ACREAGE.—There is a greater amount of fruit planting going on in the Konewock district this spring than ever before.

WRECK ON THE NORTHERN.—The east bound passenger train which left here Monday morning was wrecked on the following morning near Heron.

AN INDIAN MEDICINE WOMAN MURDERED.—Last year two unsuccessful medicine men of the Yakima tribe were murdered by relatives of deceased patients and their slayers were sentenced to the penitentiary, where one died in confinement.

COL. CLOUGH WILL BE HERE.—The great Northern, which is to have its western terminus in Seattle, may come through North Yakima and the Natches pass.

YAKIMA FRUITS UNINJURED.—D. E. Lesh reports that the fruit prospects were never better. He has made a careful examination of the trees in his orchard and says that so far there has been absolutely no injury to the fruit and that even the apricot buds, the most delicate of fruit buds, are unharmed.

K. OF P. OFFICERS INSTALLED.—Six Knights Frazier and Blumauer, of Ellensburg, arrived in the city Wednesday and proceeded to install the following officers of Yakima lodge, No. 53, Knights of Pythias: B. F. Young, P. C., F. M. Spain, C. C., S. C. Henton, V. C., Dudley Ebelman, F., F. B. Lippincott, M. of Ex., M. H. Ellis, M. of F., F. J. McCann, K. of R. S., C. H. Haines, M. of A., W. G. Kirkman, I. G., G. A. Gano, O. G.

YAKIMA TO HAVE A FOUNDRY.—The foundry for North Yakima is assured. The citizens have accepted T. J. Levitt's proposition, and the site has been selected in the vicinity of J. A. McKenna's planing mill. Mr. Levitt has ordered the plant, and is now making arrangements for letting the contract for the building. Thirty men will be employed in the foundry from the start and if business justifies the force will be increased.

Commissioner Groff in the case of John W. Walters vs. the N. P. R. E. Co. for the 50 1/2 of the sec. 15, twp. 13 N. range 18 E., taken up by the railroad company on appeal has affirmed the decision of the local land officers, giving the land to Walters. The claims of R. J. Lowe and Wm. Lindsey are also affected by this decision, as the conditions are practically the same.

LOCAL BRIEVITIES.

—Grass is now good on the range and stock is doing well.

—The incense of burning sage brush again perfumes the air.

—M. A. Allen has been appointed janitor of the Yakima Club.

—A splendid line of stock cuts just received at the Herald job office.

—C. F. Wilcox is building an attractive dwelling on his Konewock ranch.

—W. L. Stabler and John Lindsey have sold their cattle to Bounds & Meyer.

—Governor Ferry signed the McIntyre irrigation bill on Friday last and it is now a law.

—J. C. Liggett has been appointed cashier at the depot at a salary of $75 a month.

—A carload of the Nye and Huffer irrigating pumps was received this week by G. M. McKinney.

—Wm. Stiegeler is out with a force of men clearing the city ditches preparatory to turning on the water.

—A new and stunning bus was received this week by the Bartholot Hotel and now makes regular trips to trains.

—A Mother Goose party will be given immediately after lent by the members of the Episcopal Sunday school.

—A protracted meeting will be held at the Christian church, in this city, commencing next Sunday evening.

—A new mail route has been established between Prosser and Arlington, Ogn., via Bickleton, to go into effect July 1.

—Hunt has leased the Northern Pacific road from Walla to Pasco and now makes the latter place his terminus.

—There are several attractive cottages in course of erection across the track. The west side is looming up in good style.

—Among the names mentioned in connection with the office of mayor are R. K. Nichols, A. H. Reynolds and Wm. Len.

—A complete line of stallion and other stock cuts received at the Herald job office. Now is the time to get out your posters for the season.

—George Beale returned from the Wenatchee country on Monday and reports that 26 inches of snow still lingers throughout the valley.

—There will be a round-up of stray stock on the Yakima reservation beginning on next Tuesday. The meeting place will be near George Neninock's.

—A correspondent wishes some subscriber to furnish information regarding growing flax. The Herald will gladly publish a communication on this subject.

—Stockmen of the Columbia valley in conference have decided to postpone the spring round-up until the first of June, owing to the stock being in such poor condition.

—A local syndicate is arranging for erecting 11 four-room cottages. The demand for residences is constantly increasing, and for every vacant house there are a dozen applicants.

—Mutton sheep are reported very scarce and are quoted at $4.00 and $4.50. This price will drop about one half after shearing time, which is near at hand. Pelts are in demand at prices ranging as high as $2.15.

—The furniture for the Yakima Club is daily expected, and will be immediately placed in position. Messrs. G. W. Jones, W. J. Milroy and E. M. Reed have been elected to serve as house committee for the ensuing year.

—Prof. F. M. Spain of this city, grand marshal of the grand lodge of Washington I. O. O. F. will deliver the oration at Tacoma April 26, on the occasion of the 71st anniversary of the institution of Odd Fellowship in America.

—The proposed big Elliott hotel at Ellensburg, over which there was so much newspaper brouhaha, has gone by the board, and now our sister town is trying to raise a bonus of $10,000 to induce Ben E. Snipes to raise a $50,000 hotel.

—There will be a meeting at the Longmire school house, on the Wenas, Monday afternoon, to take steps for the formation of an irrigation district. R. Strobach will explain the features of the McIntyre bill to those present.

—Next Tuesday will be the first of April and the Herald will fool everyone owing this office by presenting a bill. A refusal to liquidate will not be considered a good joke. It behooves all creditors, therefore, to loosen up the strings of their sheepskins.

—The Northern Pacific has granted the city permission to use water from the railroad tank for fire purposes, and the firemen drilled themselves in getting water from this quarter Tuesday. The boys are showing much interest and propose to make the department the scene of perfection.

—Early in April a second through daily passenger train will be placed on the Northern Pacific road between St. Paul and Tacoma. The time of the passenger trains is to be shortened several hours but the exact schedule time is yet to be arranged. The trains will arrive here about twelve hours apart.

—Thomas Corbett, who has the contract for boring for artesian water in the Home Heaven country, was in the city last Saturday. He reports he is down 150 feet with no sign of moisture as yet and the drilling getting difficult owing to the tendency of the drill to follow the seams in the basaltic rock instead of going straight down.

—The Chehalis Dec says that to establish the state capital in the extreme western portion of the state is bad enough even were the Olympia politicians inclined to give a square deal. Eastern Washington, the Dec says, will next time vote solidly for North Yakima and strongly intimates that Southwestern Washington is going the same way.

Hints and Helps for the Farmer.

The past winter has demonstrated to me the advantage of having shelter for all stock and the advantage of cutting feed for them. I wintered ten head of stock, cattle and horses, from November 1 to March 1 for $100, or a little over eight cents a day per head. My stock was all under shelter and nearly all the feed was run through a cutting machine. It is a great deal of work where you cut by hand, but it paid when feed was scarce and high. Hand cutting is all right where you only have a few head to cut for. I would advise any farmer who contemplates buying a machine not to make the mistake of getting too small a machine. Take the one with a large balance wheel; but by all means use a power cutter. I feel safe in stating that over one-third can be saved in feed by cutting and mixing with ground grain. I am much pleased with bean and shorts as feed. I hope that a great many cutting machines will be put in use next winter in Yakima county. I hope, too, that every farmer will have a good supply of root crop for stock feed.

HAULING MANURE.—I adopted a new plan in cleaning my stables the past winter, and it is to load the manure on a sled and haul to the field as fast as made. This saves a disagreeable job in the spring when there is so much ice to do, and the manure is more valuable, as the fertilizing elements have not been wasted by the leaching from winter snow and rain.

PLANTING FRUIT TREES.—In setting your new orchard set one year old trees if possible. They are disturbed less in their removal from the nursery and make a more vigorous growth; further, you can control the shape of the top better. Head all trees back well. Do not let your trees branch too high from the ground. Last season I set an orchard and headed back one-half. I am going through it now and cutting back in some cases one-third more. Do not be afraid of cutting back too much; you will undoubtedly err the other way. My own experience and observation throughout the county convince me that usually trees are not cut back enough.

—Eugene Lennon, the contractor arrived from Walla Walla Wednesday and will, as soon as he can get his men engaged, start in on the completion of the Caldwell brick buildings. Mr. Lennon proposes to buy ground here and make a large number of brick as he feels convinced that there will be a demand for them this summer.

—Agent Priestley has secured an appropriation for the purchase of eight wagons, four trucks and a quantity of wheat, oats and potatoes for the Yakima Indians. The grain and potatoes are made necessary by the Indians feeding everything to their stock during the past winter and not retaining even enough for seed.

—Ellensburg Register: While great loss of stock, especially sheep, is reported, yet Mr. Carruthers, living six miles from this place, informs us that a neighbor lost only 300 head out of a band of 1,800, but it cost $1 per head to feed those remaining. This is the most favorable report we have heard regarding stock losses.

—Our farmers are waking up to the value of alfalfa for feed and many extensive fields are being sown. Dan McDonald, W. W. McCarthy, E. J. Erickson, E. V. Flint, J. A. Stone, R. Dunn and a number of others are putting in considerable acreage to this useful and remunerative crop.

—The Business Men's Jubilee is a novel entertainment which will be given at the opera house on the 7th or 8th of April by the ladies of the M. E. church. It has been a success wherever it has been given and is spoken of as one of the most amusing entertainments recently offered to the public.

—Ned Parker, a fakir with a poor article of pens and a greenback bait, held forth in this city last week and raked in the shekels of the gaudy in a manner that falsified any talk of hard times. Getting wealthy off of street fakirs is the slowest known way of acquiring riches.

—Work on the new brick school house on the west side is progressing rapidly. The basement walls are finished and the masons are now employed on the first story. Yakima will soon have better school facilities than any town of its size in the Northwest. Three handsome brick school houses is a splendid showing for a five-year-old city.

—The lawn is assuming a beautiful green; gooseberry and currant bushes are putting out leaves, also crab trees; black-caps have also started; gardens are being planted, and everything is being done to secure an abundant crop this season and to provide for future prosperity.

Of Interest to Farmers and Others.

In view of the fact that all of our farmer friends have been under heavy expense in getting through the long hard winter, we have determined to make lower prices than ever before on all lines of goods, especially in buggies, hacks, light wagons and plows, which it will be much to your interest to learn. Considering the quite severe stringency which the expensive winter has produced we are much pleased with the volume of trade given us and wish to express to all our appreciation of your very kind patronage and assure you that we shall not cease to strive to merit a continuance of the same. Our stock is very large—too large, really, just now—and we shall make especially low prices in order to reduce it. We hope that you will not fail to see us if you want barb wire, any kind of farm implements or tools, buggies, carts, wagons, or any kind of edge tools, building hardware, stoves or house furnishing goods.

It is never any trouble to show goods and we shall be pleased to see you at any and all times in our store.

Very Respectfully,
SAWYER & PENNINGTON.
