His enthusiastic neighbors, who knew that "General" lighters had a fat pocket-book and would put up liberally for campaign expenses, suggested his name. But the "general" majestically put away the tempting suggestion and declared that nothing could induce him to forego the pleasures of his European trip. He had served his country, had been abused for it, and he was going to linger among the old world despotisms and leave it to its fate. His neighbors, however, knew the weakness of Sparks. Again they made the proffer of a nomination. Again it was declined, but with less positiveness than on the former occasion. Recently a third tender was made and it was put away more gently, but still it was put away just as Crear refused the crown. Washington letter: I hear that "General" William Andrew Jackson Sparks, ex-commissioner of the land office, is just now torn by conflicting emotions. He can't make up his mind whether he would prefer to come back to congress or go to Europe. At one stage of his carreer when the doughty land commissioner was unsettling titles all over the count's reasonable to give him some places where he could do no harm. The consultae to color was suggested and seemed to strike the president favorably. He casually intimated to a congressman who knew Sparks well what his intention was. The congressman promptly vetoed it.

"It wouldn't do at all," he said to Mr. Cleveland. "Do you know what would happen? Sparks won't be there three months till he will be questioning the title of the Khedive to the Pyramids and ordering the Egyptians to file a quit-claim deed to the Sphinx. He'll get us into a grand international row."

This reasoning was so forcible that Mr. Cleveland kept his land commissioner at home an i subsequently kicked him down the back stairs without any sort of a cushion to fall on.

Some time prior to 1860, Mr. Georg Gibbs, a scientific gentleman attached t the United States Boundary commission then locating the boundary of the British territory on our northern side, sought to possess himself of some Indian traditions,

"What was the name of the type?"

"Oh, yes," replied the Indian.

"What was it?" asked Mr. Gibbs.

"Many moons ago, I have heard them say," replied the Indian, "this whole land was covered by water by a big rain, and all the people except one type (or chief) and his family were drowned."

"What was the name of the type?" asked Gibbs, now quite hopeful of getting a vertiable tradition.

EDITOR HERALD:—It is best for suscep-tible people who go to the theatres to be content with the seats they occupy and never wander behind the scenes. When one of the tender and emotional artistes walks off from the glare of the footlights and save, in a purely formation. and says, in a purely dramatic way, that she is going out into a garden of roses, or that she is going to meet some Romeo or Adonis in an arbor, where the cascades Adonis in an arbor, where the cascades are creamy and the birds are on the wing, give the girl a chance and believe all she says. Sit still where you are and never doubt; weep for the female as she vanishes, and go with her, in your mind, when you retire. It is sweet to be lured to slumber by the thought that the fair young thing is being bathed in dew-drops; it is comforting to think, as you turn over, that she is thumping the guitar in some Arcadia, and that a cavalier is dying to win her affection.

The young man who attends the Adelphi has not been any more successful in his dreams or his "work" than the old codger of the Coliseum. In fact he is worse off. There is a great and impassible rivalry between the "queens" of the Coliseum and the "falent" at the Adelphi. The latter consider themselves several octaves above the former, and say with some pride that they don't have to work in a "beer saloon" where is run in the gallery. They point to the fact that the "old Adelphi" is crowded with the "boys," and that twice a week the first families of the town come to see them. Hence it is that the Adelphi "queen of song" and the "danseuse" et el., are toney in their desires. They go from the theatre to their rooms, and from from the theatre to their rooms, and from the rooms to the restaurant. Maybe the the rooms to the restaurant. Maybe the young man who has "been in the business" doesn't have to pay for so much cold meat and vegetables, but he has confessed that the wine account is heavier than it was on the "avenue." And the Adelphi queen never accepts anything less than a diamond ring. But she will sigh over her troubles with the incorrigible managers, the same as the Coliseum fairy. She has no dog.

There the "star" stands on her head in the wine room, if some duffer will put up the beer; she will snok, she will chew, she will swear, and if provoked she will fight. When the "uproar" is over with her she hies with the "anide" to a beer saloon over the way, where sausage and cheese are good enough for her. She carries her "wardrobe" on her back. When her appetite is toned down, she is ready for anything that may be suggested. Thus do the "stars" twinkle in other heavens and in other ways than those of which the susceptible mind of times dreams.

A WOMAN'S HEART.

It Responds to Lochinvar Methods of Court-ship-....Hme. De Barrios' Life of Romance.

Mme. de Barrios, widow of the South American dictator, is 33 years of age, the mother of seven children, a heauty and worth $7,000,000. She is one of the pretiest woman in New York, of a dark, rich South American type, and despite the seven children has not lost the hint of her freshness and charm. Her story is a romantic one. At 14 years of age she had reached that sudden development to womanhood which comes to South American girls almost as soon as they turn into their teens; the Dictator Barrios, who was then nearly 40, caught a glimpse into their teens; the Dictator Barrios, who was then nearly 40, caught a glimpse of her one day, and being inspired with a sudden passion, demanded her hand. Very naturally the girl rebelled at being turned over to a man old enough to be her father, and her parents objected to the match also, not only on account of disparity in the years, but on the ground that the position of a South American dictator is not one of sufficient security to insure the future happiness of the woman insure the future happiness of the woman. insure the tuture happiness of the woman who marries him, so the young lady was whisked off to a mountain convent and General Barrios' offer was respectfully but firmly declined. While he was building the famous Stamwho has so many law suits and dollvrs. While he was building the famous Stampede tunnel he issued an order forbiding the driver of the dumpcare to allow any one to ride in or out of the tunnel on a car. One day Bennett was in the "heading" clad in overalls, gum boots and an overcoat whose better days were over, and started to walk out to the mouth of the tunnel just as a dumpcar was leaving. Beinnett jumped aboard the small platform which the driver stood on and was promptly told "to get off of here." This somewhat surprised the contractor, and he remarked "Guess you haven't been driving here very long." "Naw, I haven't said the driver, "but you get off" a this car P. D. Q.; d'ye hear?" "But I have a right to ride on these cars," said Bennett. "Not while I'm drivin' san you don't," said the driver; "skip," and Benett mekly "skipped" and walked slowly out.
