Famous Popular Songs, "Auld Lang Syne" is popularly supposed to be the composition of Burns.

"Kathleen Mavourneen" was sold by Crouch, the author, for $25, and brought the publishers as many thousands.

"The Old Oaken Bucket" was written by Woodworth in New York City during the hot summer of 1817.

"Bonnie Down" was the only English ballad that the Emperor Napoleon liked.

"I'll Hang my Harp on a Willow Tree" is said to have been written by a young English nobleman in love with the Princess (now Queen) Victoria.

"Annie Laurie" is two hundred years old, and was the production of a man named Douglas to celebrate the birth of a girl named Laurie.

"Sally in the Alley" was written by Carey, the dramatist.

Among other reminiscences published in the last issue of the Chronicle, is the following story in reference to the Custer massacre.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO, There can, however, be no doubt that a wonderful amelioration has taken place since that day in the condition of the poor.

On the 23rd of June, 1876, General Terry sent me with instructions to come to his tent at once.

"I started about 7 o'clock in the morning and rode until about noon. I saw a company of what I supposed to be soldiers, drawn up in marching order, with the 7th's battle flag, which I had often seen before.

"On came the devilish demons, whose fleet ponies soon brought them within gunshot, and for a few minutes I was the moving target for the seven, returning the fire as best I could.

"A Lie on the Ocean Wave," by Epes Sargent, was pronounced a failure by his friends. The copyright of the song became very valuable.

ble, though Sargent never got anything from it himself.

"What are the Wild Waves Saying?" was suggested to Dr. Carpenter by a scene from Dickens' novel, "Dombey and Son."

"Poor Jack" was from the pen of Chas. Dillin, the author of the "Lantern." "Poor Jack" netted $25,000 for its publishers.

"Stanzas of the Summer Night," a very famous song, especially for serenaders, was written by Alfred H. Pease, the noted pianist.

"Zozo's Young Dream" was one of Moore's best, but the tune to which it is commonly sung is from the Irish ballad called "The Old Woman."

"Auld Robin Gray" was the work of Lady Anne Lindsay, who tells a curious story of the circumstances of its composition.

"Kathleen Mavourneen" was sold by Crouch, the author, for $25, and brought the publishers as many thousands.

After riding this way for a mile or so, I became more calm, but still kept a strict lookout for the Indians.

"I had lowered to keep the peace as I was being over by the Sioux boys, but I reckon I'll have to break over, fur I don't see no other chance."

"I don't understand you." "I reckon not, but turn about in fair play, fur I don't understand you."

"I meant no insult by the word sir, and need it thoughtlessly." "Yes, I reckon so, but it won't do to let a feller go on that way."

"What do you intend to do?" "Fight yet." "What for?"

"Partly because I don't like your shape, partly 'cause you come arouse here like a travellin' school house, an' partly because I want to keep my hat in. I ain't had no jenny-wain exercise since I jined the church an' laid off yo'."

"Well, if you must fight," replied the engineer, "I am with you, come on."

The two men "pranced" around each other for a few minutes, and began pugilistic dodges and devices.

"I don't know," replied the engineer, "Look around, and if you discover an error we'll endeavor to correct it."

"You'd better rest awhile." "Look here, ain't yer one o' them fellers what they read about?" "Well, not particularly."

"I believe yer air. Come in the house," and they entered the cabin. "Wife, this is the boss. Set down ah. Come here, Tiddy, an' see the cap'n. Whar's the boyse? Out, yer say? SATURDAY, DEC. 1, 1883. ON THE 27th of last month the Legislature passed bills granting charters for the City of Spokane Falls Sprague and other places.

We see it stated in the associated press dispatches that both the miners of Nevada and Montana are highly wrought up over the Coeur d'Alene gold discoveries, and preparations are being made by thousands of people to start for the new diggings very early in the spring.

SPokane County has been cut up and made into three counties by the legislature this winter. First Lincoln county was sliced off, and now the northern part of Lincoln is again divided making Douglas county with the county seat at Okanogan. This embraces the Big Bend country, and it would seem from the ease it slipped through the settlers had no trouble in getting a new county set aside.

MINING LAWS.

Jas. H. Kennedy, of this city, desiring some information regarding the United States mining laws, wrote to the Secretary of the Interior and received the following reply: DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

The following are the sections that the Commissioner refers to in his letter. Sec. 231. The miners of each mining district may make reclamation of the land within the limits of the district, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall have the right to hold possession of a mining claim, subject to the following requirements: That the location must be distinctly marked on the ground so that its location can be readily traced. All records of mining claims hereafter made shall contain the name or names of the locator or locators, and a brief description of the claim or claims located by reference to the local and general maps of the United States. I am not, however, authorized to state the exact time and location by a minor is valid. I do not think it impossible that cases may arise where such a location would not be sustained.

LOCAL.

There was not as large an audience at Cannon's Hall last Saturday evening to see Jack Langrishe in "A Man in a Maze" as the worth of the company deserved, but the shortage can be accounted for by the miserable weather. The troupe is among the best that has performed here this fall and gave entire satisfaction.

H. W. Mack, who has occupied the position of steward both at the Sprague and California Houses during the past year, is about to branch out on his own hook. He proposes to open an oyster house and lunch counter in the building occupied by Stoll & Bowen, as a dental office, on or about the 10th of this month. As Mack has proven by his long experience entering to the public that he understands just how to conduct an eating establishment his success with a lunch house like the one he proposes to open is a foregone conclusion. The public are assured that the institution will be first-class in all its appointments.

ROUGH EXPERIENCE.

Lost in the Snow for Twenty-four Hours.

E. J. Webster, an attorney of our city, had a little experience while hunting this week that he is not liable to forget if he were to live a hundred years, one of those trying experiences that brings a man face to face with death, in which the escape is almost miraculous. The circumstances are as follows: Last Saturday Mr. Webster concluded to sally forth and slay deer. His ambition was fired by the sight of snow and reports that the noble animals stood around among the trees near Rathdrum awaiting their fate through the hands of the sportsman. Mr. Webster talked vision with Mr. Hartson, and that gentleman was also worked up to a murderous pitch. It was decided that they should run up the road together. Saturday Mr. Webster was on hand at train time, armed with a good rifle and a big stock of anticipation, but his friend filled through business engagements from showing up. Nothing daunted the single hunter departed, his destination being the Dodge brothers' saw mill near Rathdrum. He reached the mill all right, and Sunday morning, in company with several others, he started out on the trail. About noon he left the party and returned to the house. The ladies informed him that dinner would not be ready until 4 o'clock, so he concluded to take a short run up a canyon to the rear of the premises. After tramping a short distance he struck the fresh track of a deer. With the natural enthusiasm of a hunter he followed close upon the scent. Occasionally he caught glimpses of the game, the snow, some three feet deep, greatly impeding the progress of the hunter and the deer. Mr. Webster forgot everything in his eagerness to secure a shot. He plodded along the sinuous track, paying no heed to time, distance, or direction. This chase was kept up for several hours, until suddenly the tracks he was following became blended with many others. He then paused and looked about. The short day of the northern winter was drawing rapidly to a close. Snow commenced falling. The wind was cold and the hunter exhausted from the effects of the exertion. Around about him were forests of snow-laden pines. Mountains looked down upon him from all sides. In whatever direction he turned the same monotonous scene was before his eyes. He realized that he was lost. Lost out in a snow storm, among trees and mountains, with no idea of the distance to a habitation. The prospect was appalling. Not a sound disturbed the dead solitude and silence of the woods. Few persons who have not experienced the sensation of being lost in the midst of a driving snow storm can realize the horror of Mr. Webster's situation. To go ahead may be to carry one entirely out of the direction that he should follow, and to retreat footsteps that are being rapidly obliterated is not to be thought of. Hope almost died out, and the belated traveler can only see in the useless snow death and a winding sheet. But Mr. Webster did not give up. He recognized his terrible position. Without food, compass, matches, or watch and totally ignorant of the country he determined now to make a desperate struggle for his life. Bearing off from the course he had been pursuing he plodded on. His movements were painfully slow. He had on his rubber boots, and the snow was to the top of them. Night fell rapidly. He came to the conclusion that he was to stay out, as in the darkness it was impossible to move forward. Creeping under a heavy pine tree, he broke off some branches to make himself as comfortable as possible for the night. He judged it to be six o'clock. While shivering and dreading the long night he strained to catch the slightest sound, indistinctly caught the notes of a steam whistle. He listened again? He was not mistaken, but the sound was so indistinct that he could not fix the direction. This renewed hope and the exhausted tramping. For fully four hours he struggled through the snow at last losing the sound of the whistle entirely. He again sought the protection, scant as it was, of a pine tree, but was too exhausted to break off any more limbs. How he managed to keep awake through the night, the longest in his experience he can never tell. His feet were ringing wet, his coat frozen so that it would stand alone, one glove lost, avalanches of snow falling upon him from the pines at short intervals. It was a terrible vigil. At the first sign of day light Mr. Webster again started, but his movements were slow and painful. Yet he did not give up. Shortly after starting he heard the whistle of a locomotive, a long ways off, but ahead. He knew it must be at Rathdrum. With resumed energy he pressed on. So he plodded for hours. He struck a trail over which a lumber wagon had passed the day before. He knew it must lead to the mill. About 2 o'clock Monday afternoon he struck the tram way running to the mill, in sight of the house and mill. At that moment Mr. Webster gave out and fell prostrate. He was observed by the ladies and two men carried him to the house. Restoratives were applied, but it was several hours before he came around and two days before he could travel home. It seems that every effort had been made to find Mr. Webster. The Dodge brothers got up steam Sunday and kept the mill whistle blowing until 10 o'clock at night, besides the entire party scoured the mountains for the lost man. Telegrams were sent up and down the road, inquiring if he had struck the railroad. On Mr. Webster's return the kind people did all in their power for him, and he can thank them for his restoration. Mr. Webster is comparatively small, of light build and suffers in one limb from a serious wound received during the war, and it is a terrible time he feels a stronger desire to get into the Coeur d'Alene mountains on a hunt in the winter time he will stay at home.
