Agriculture.

How shall I Plant Trees?

Anybody can plant a tree, or rather dig a hole and put it into the ground—but it is one thing to place a tree in the earth, and another thing to do it in such a way that the tree will be sure to live. We profess to have had some practical experience, and as there is a difference between practical and theoretical, (vide S. F. Chronicle) we shall briefly make some suggestions for the guidance of those who may be disposed to adopt them.

Our time of planting will always be in the autumn, if it is possible, the time of the leaves falling, after a few good frosts; a little time from this the sap of the tree has ceased circulation, and the tree is in its dormant condition. It is now at rest, and can be removed safely, and without any injury or detriment to it, or check to those buds that may have been formed for the coming year's crop. Another important item, a tree can be lifted with more fibrous roots, and less injury to the large roots, in the autumn, than at any other period; especially from a nursery, where it has been properly attended to (and purchasers should patronize none others) because the earth at this period is more loose and pliable than after the heavy rains of the winter. And for the same reason it can be better planted; the earth, being mellow and soft, can be placed around all the delicate roots in a careful and compact form, and at its period of rest, without breaking and injury in the least.

When trees are planted in autumn, with us December and January, there is no loss or waste of sap; if by any mishap or injury a large root is broken at this season, cut it off with sharp knife; but little injury can result, for if the sap still moves, it will go to work and form new roots—there will be no waste and many trees, nearly all trees planted at this season, in this climate, will make more or less roots during the winter, and thus be the better prepared for the opening of spring.

When, on the contrary, trees are planted late in the season, or in the spring after the sap begins to move upwards as well as downward, if trees are lifted it will always be found that the new roots, those white and delicate fibrous roots, will be broken off; the tree had commenced growing, and consequently all the roots thus broken off are a loss to the tree; the tree will make more, but it has lost a part of its strength, and cannot do as well as if it had not, for the tree is compelled to make these roots over again. It first has to heal the wound made by breakage, and then make new roots. Every tree taken up for transplanting should always have the broken roots carefully pruned off, a clean smooth cut; a broken limb, when amputated by a physician, is cut off above the break—so a broken root or branch should be amputated above the break.

The principle is the same; the roots and branches of a tree are its legs and arms. The autumn then is our time for planting all kinds of trees, except evergreens; they should only be planted when the sap begins to move with vigor, just as the terminal buds are peeping, or even breaking.

The way and manner of planting is as important as the season. Orchards, gardens, or any grounds designed for horticultural purposes, should be subsoiled and tranch-spaded; especially in a climate like California it is indispensable to success. Science, practical experience and great practical results, thus far, in our State, as well as the peculiar indications of our atmosphere, prove this. When such a preparation of the ground is made, a constant cultivation afterwards is easy; and whatever is grown upon the soil thus prepared, shows, by its thriftiness and beauty, that all the elements of success are in harmony: earth, air, light and heat are in concord, and the quick flowing sap speaks in bright and fragrant blossoms, and luscious full, ripe fruits, each in their several seasons. We shall renew the subject, and mention those nurseries where we think practical horticulture is being understood.—Cal Farmer.

Drilling Cloverseed.

According to the report of a practice upon a farm near Chelmsford, in England, the drilling of the clover seed has been found not only a great saving of seed, but also has rendered the crop more certain, and of better quality. The writer says clover and all other seeds have been drilled upon this farm with the most successful results as regards the plants; indeed, we feel that no other mode is more certain, and feel assured that two-thirds the quantity of seed will more certainly secure a crop by drilling than one-third more would effect, if sown by hand; ten pounds of clover being ample per acre when drilled properly. Is this not worth a trial, where clover is so important a crop, and especially now, when the price of seed renders a saving of a third sufficient to pay the interest on considerable of an amount invested in seed-drills? Few will pretend that a field of ten acres can be well seeded with less than two bushels, or one hundred and twenty pounds. Should the drill save one-third of this, and at the same time produce a crop one third better, and with more certainty, the drilling of cloverseed should certainly be considered a matter worth the attention of farmers.

Horticulture in Palestine.

PALESTINE IN SEPTEMBER.—During the first half of this month the weather usually is sultry. From the 15th to the 25th, heavy squalls of wind from the west often prevail; from which rain may be foreboded, and which generally comes in heavy showers called the 'first rains.' The highest temperature of this month may be 92 degrees Fahr., the lowest 62 degrees; and it seldom varies more than twelve degrees in the twenty-four hours. On the fall of the first rains the thermometer begins to sink gradually, until it reaches the minimum above named.

The pomegranate now ripens its fruit, which is in great request in Palestine. The tree grows there about twenty feet high. In this month families lay by a store of the fruit for winter use. There are said to be three varieties, one very acid, one sweet, and one of medium flavor between the other two. The first is often substituted for vinegar. The others are eaten with sugar and with rose-water, and used also in a dried state in cookery.

The mulberry tree is cultivated in great quantities in the district of Lebanon, and silk forms a considerable product in that region.

The Sorghum Saccharatum, which is now occupying much of the attention of agriculturists in this country, has for ages been an important product of Syria, where it is known by the name of Dourra; and it is cultivated there for its grain, and not for the cane, nor materially for fodder. In Egypt the stalks and straw are used for the roof of huts and cabins. A good white flour is made from the grain, and is baked in cakes.

Millet and rice are grains that are raised and used in considerable quantities in Palestine; but the latter is not raised in sufficient bulk to supply the native market.

Lentils and chick pea (cicer arietinum) are consumed in large quantities as vegetables by the natives. Lupins, also, are used in the same way.

Indigo is indigenous in several parts of Syria, and it is cultivated to some extent; the quality of it being good, and much superior to that grown in Egypt. The valley of the Jordan seems to be the best locality for it. Madder, also, is a valuable plant, but seems not to be cultivated to any great extent.

Of oil-producing plants, (in addition to the olive, adverted to in former articles by us) the castor-oil plant and the Sesamum Orientale are the principal ones. But the medicinal properties of the former appear to be unknown to the present inhabitants of the country; and it is simply for lamps and general purposes that the oil from it is used.—N. Y. Independent.

The Well-Digger; an Over-True Tale.

BY JOHN G. BAXE.

Come listen all while I relate
What recently befell
Upon a farmer down in Maine,
While digging of a well.

Full many a yard he dug and delved,
And still he dug in vain;
"Alack!" quoth he, "an' water seems Prohibited in Maine!"

And still he dug and delved away,
And still the well was dry;
The only water to be found
Was in the farmer's eye;

For by the breaking of the bank,
That tumbled from its station,
All suddenly his hope was dashed
Of future liquidation!

And now his hands were running fast,
And he had died, no doubt,
But that just when the well caved in,
He happened to be out!

"Alas! I have a lucky thought,"
Exclaimed this wicked man;
"To dig anew this cursed well
I see a pretty plan!"

"I'll hide my straight, and when my wife
And she my neighbors know
What's happened to my digging here,
They'll think that I'm below!"

"And so to save my precious life,
They'll dig the well, no doubt,
E'en deeper than 'twas dug at first,
Before they find me out!"

And so he hid him in the barn
Through all the hungry day,
To bide the digging of his well
In this doubtful way.

But list what grief and shame befell
This false, ungrateful man,
The while he stily watched to see
The working of his plan!

The neighbors all with one accord
Cut each other said:
"With such a weight of earth above,
The man is surely dead."

And then the wife, with pious care,
All needless toil to save,
Said: "Since the Lord hath willed it so,
E'en let it be his grave!"

The Slenderer.

I hate the slenderer,
I hate him for his poison breath,
More deadly than the dew of death;
I hate him for his hooded life,
His peace-drooping calumny;
His words I hate—so arch, so sly,
So void of generosity—
So deep, so empty, yet so full
Of what will social joy annul!
His heart's a gall, his tongue a fire,
His soul too base for generous ire,
His sword too keen for noble use,
His shield and buckler are abuse;
I hate the slenderer!

A PERILOUS SITUATION.

On my return from the upper Mississippi, I found myself obliged to cross one of the wild prairies, which in that portion of the United States vary the appearance of the country. The weather was very fine; all around me was fresh and blooming as if it had just issued from the bosom of nature. My knapsack, my gun, and my dog, were all I had for baggage or company. The track which I followed was an old Indian one; and, as darkness overshadowed the prairies, I felt some desire to reach at least a copse, in which I might lie down to rest.

The night-hawks were skimming over and around me, attracted by the buzzing wings of the beetles, which form their food, and the distant howl of wolves gave me some hope that I would soon arrive at the skirt of some woodland. I did so; and almost at the same instant, a fire-light attracted my eye. I moved towards it, full of confidence that it proceeded from some wandering Indians. I was mistaken; I discovered from its glare that it was from the hearth of a small log cabin, and that a tall figure passed and repassed between it and me, as if busily engaged in household arrangements.

I reached the spot, and presenting myself at the door, asked a tall figure, which proved to be a woman, if I might take shelter under her roof for the night. Her voice was gruff, and her attire negligently thrown about her. She answered in the affirmative. I walked in, took a stool, and quietly seated myself by the fire. The next object that attracted my attention was a finely formed young Indian, resting his head between his hands, with his elbows upon his knees. A long bow rested against the log wall near him, while a quantity of arrows and two or three raccoon skins lay at his feet. He moved not; he apparently breathed not.

Accustomed to the habits of the Indians, and knowing that they pay little attention to the approach of civilized strangers, (a circumstance which in some countries is considered as evincing the apathy of their character) I addressed him in French, a language not infrequently partially known to the people in this neighborhood. He raised his head, pointed to one of his eyes with his finger, and gave me a significant look with the other. His face was covered with blood. The fact was that, an hour before this, as he was in the act of discharging an arrow at a raccoon in the top of a tree, the arrow split upon the cord, and sprang back with such violence into his right eye as to destroy it forever.

Feeling hungry, I inquired what sort of fare I was to expect. Such a thing as a bed was not to be seen, but many large untanned bear and buffalo hides lay piled up in a corner. I drew a fine time-piece from my breast, and told the woman that it was now late, and that I was very much fatigued. She had espied my watch, the richness of which seemed to operate on her feelings with electric quickness. She told me there was plenty of venison and jerked buffalo meat, and that, on removing the ashes, I should find a cake. But my watch had struck her fancy, and her curiosity had to be gratified by an immediate sight of it.

I took off the gold chain that secured it from around my neck, and presented it to her. She was all ecstasy, and spoke of its beauty, asked me its value, and put the chain around her neck, saying how happy the possession of such a watch would make her. Thoughtless, and as I fancied myself in so retired a spot, secure, I paid very little attention to her talk or her movements. I helped my dog to a good supper of venison, and was not long in satisfying the demands of my own appetite.

The Indian rose from his seat as if in extreme suffering. He passed and repassed me several times, and once pinched me on the side so violently that the pain brought forth an exclamation of anger. I looked at him. His eye met mine; but his look was so forbidding that it struck a chill into the more nervous part of my system. He again seated himself, drew his butcher knife from his greasy scabbard, examined its edge as if I would do that of a razor suspected dull, and, again taking his tomahawk from his back, filled the back of it with tobacco, and sent me expressive glances whenever our hostess chanced to have her back towards us.

Never till that moment had my senses been awakened to the danger which I now suspected to be around me. I returned glance for glance with my companion, and became well assured that whatever enemies I might have, he was not of their number.

I asked the woman for my watch, wound it up, and, under pretence of wishing to see how the weather might probably be on the morrow, took my gun and walked out of the cabin. I slipped a ball into each barrel, scraped the edges of my flint, renewed the priming, returned to the hut, and gave a favorable account of my observations. I took up a few bear-skins, made a pallet of them, and, calling my faithful dog to my side, lay down with my gun close to my body, and in a few minutes was to all appearances fast asleep.

A short time had elapsed, when some voices were heard; and from the corner of my eyes I saw two athletic youths making their entrance, bearing a dead stag on a pole. They disposed of their burden, and, asking for whisky, helped themselves freely to it. Observing me and the wounded Indian, they asked who I was, and why that rascal (meaning the Indian, who they knew understood not a word of English) was in the house.

The mother (for so she proved to be) bade them speak less loudly, made mention of my watch, and took them to a corner, where a conversation ensued, the purport of which required little shrewdness in me to guess. I tapped my dog gently. He moved his tail, and with indescribable pleasure I saw his fine eyes alternately fixed on me and raised towards the trio in the corner. I felt that he perceived the danger of my situation. The Indian exchanged a glance with me.

The lady had eaten and drunken themselves into such a condition that I already looked upon them as hors de combat, and the frequent visits of the whisky bottle to the ugly mouth of their dame, I hoped would soon reduce her to a like state. Judge of my astonishment when I saw this incarnate fiend take a large carving knife, and go to a grindstone to whet its edge.

I saw her pour the water on the turning machine and watched her working away on the dangerous instrument, until the cold sweat covered every part of my body, in spite of my determination to defend myself to the last. Her task finished, she walked to her reeling sons and said, "There, that will soon settle him!" She then directed them to kill the Indian while she dispatched me.

I turned, made ready my gun, silently touched my faithful companion, and lay ready to start up and shoot the first that should attempt my life. The moment was fast approaching, and that night might have been my last had not Providence made preparations for my rescue. All was ready, the old hag advanced slowly, probably contemplating the best way of dispatching me, while her sons should be engaged with the Indian. I was several times on the eve of rising and shooting her on the spot; but she was not to be punished thus. The door suddenly opened, and there entered two stout travellers, each with a long rifle on his shoulder. I bounced upon my feet, and making them most heartily welcome, told them how well it was for me that they should have arrived at that moment.

The tale was told in a moment. The drunken sons were secured, and the woman, in spite of her defence and vociferations, shared the same fate. The wounded Indian fairly danced for joy and gave us to understand that as he could not sleep for pain, he would watch over us. You may suppose that we slept much less than talked. The two strangers told me that they themselves had once been in a similar condition.

The next morning our captives were unbound, and after inflicting on them a proper chastisement and suitably rewarding the friendly Indian, we set off towards the settlements. During upwards of twenty-five years, when my wanderings extended to all parts of our country, this was the only time at which my life was in danger from my fellow-creatures. Indeed, so little risk do travellers run in the United States that no one born there ever dreams of any danger to be encountered on the road; and I can only account for this occurrence by supposing that the inhabitants of the cabin were not Americans.

Elder Blunt and Sister Scrub.

In one of the Eastern States there is a settlement which has long been celebrated as a stronghold of Methodism. It is an out-of-the-way neighborhood, yet no place in the whole country is better known or more highly esteemed. In the centre of the settlement, just where two roads cut each other at right angles, making a "four corners," is the school-house, painted red, and long familiar as the only place of public worship in the settlement. The people are well off now, and have built a nice and commodious church, on the opposite corner. A few rods up the road from the school-house lived Squire Scrub. You could see, at first sight, that the Squire was well to do in this world, for everything about him denoted it. There was his picket fence all around his garden painted red, and the top tipped with white; there was his house, a modest one-story and a half, with a lean to it in the rear, painted white all over; there was a barn, a large well-filled barn it was; there was the farm, a choice lot of one hundred acres, well cultivated; and besides all this, there was the honors and emoluments of the important office of justice of the peace. The Squire was, of course, a man of note in town. He had been a justice several times in succession. He was a trustee of the school district, and he was both class-leader and steward in the Methodist Church. I have no doubt he would have received other honors at the hands of his fellow-townsmen and brethren, had he been eligible. Still he was a quiet, unassuming man, and I verily believe he thought more of his religion than of all his ecclesiastical and civil honors. His house was the itinerant's home; and a right sweet, pleasant home it would have been but for a certain unfortunate weakness of the every other way excellent Sister Scrub. The weakness I allude to was, or at least it was suspected to be, the love of praise. Now, the good sister was really worthy of high praise, and she often received it; but she had a way of disparaging herself and her performances, which some people thought was intended to invite praise. No housewife kept her floors looking so clean and her walls so well whitewashed as she. Every board was scrubbed and scoured till further scrubbing and scouring would have been labor wasted. No one could look on her whitened floor, and not admire the polish her industry gave it. The Squire was the good provider, and Sister Scrub was an excellent cook; and so their table groaned under a burden of good things on all occasions when good cheer are demanded. And yet you could never enter the house and sit half an hour without being reminded that "Husband held court yesterday, and she couldn't keep the house decent." If you sat down to eat with them, she was sorry "she hadn't anything fit to eat." She had been scrubbing, or washing, or ironing, or she had been half sick, and she hadn't got such and such things that she ought to have. Nor did it matter how bountiful or how well prepared the repast really was, there was always something deficient, the want of which furnished a text for a disparaging discourse on the occasion.

I remember once, that we sat down to a table that a king might have been happy to enjoy. There was the light snow-white bread, there were the potatoes steaming in butter, there were chickens swimming in gravy, there were the onions and the trunks, and I was sure Sister Scrub had gratified her ambition for once. We sat down, and a blessing was asked. Instantly the good sister began. She was afraid her coffee was burned, or that the water had been smoked, or that she hadn't roasted the chickens enough. There ought to have been some salad, and it was too bad that there was nothing nice to offer them.

We, of course, endured these unjustifiable apologies as well as we could, simply remarking that everything was really nice, and proving by our acts that the repast was tempting to our appetites.

I will now introduce another actor to the reader—Elder Blunt, the circuit preacher. Elder Blunt was a good man. His religion was of the most genuine, experimental kind. He was a very plain man. He, like Mr. Wesley, would no more dare to preach a fine sermon than wear a fine coat. He was celebrated for his common-sense way of exhibiting the principles of religion. He would speak just what he thought, and as he felt. He somehow got the name of being an eccentric preacher, as every man I believe does, who never prevaricates, and always acts and speaks as he thinks.

Somehow or other, Elder Blunt had heard of Sister Scrub, and that infirmity of hers, and he resolved to cure her. On his first round he stopped at Squire Scrub's, as all other itinerants had done before him. John, the young man, took the Elder's horse and put him in the stable, and the preacher entered the house. He was shown into the best room, and soon felt very much at home. He expected to hear something in due time disparaging the domestic arrangements, but heard it sooner than he expected. This time, if Sister Scrub could be credited, her house was all upside down; and it wasn't fit to stay in, and she was sadly mortified to be caught in such a plight. The Elder looked all around the room as if to observe the terrible disorder, but he said not a word. By-and-by the dinner was ready, and the Elder sat down with the family to a well spread table. Here again everything was found faulty; the coffee wasn't fit to drink, and she hadn't anything fit to eat. The Elder lifted his dark eye to her face; for a moment he seemed to penetrate her very soul with his austere gaze; then slowly rising from the table, he said,

"Brother Scrub, I want my horse immediately, I must leave."

"Why, Brother Blunt, what is the matter?" "Matter? Why, sir, your house isn't fit to stay in, and you haven't anything fit to eat or drink, and I won't stay."

Both the Squire and his lady were confounded. This was a piece of eccentricity entirely unlooked for. He wouldn't stay in a house not fit to stay in, and where there wasn't anything fit to eat and drink.

Poor Sister Scrub! She wept like a child at her folly. She "knew it would be all over town," she said, and everybody would be laughing at her. And then how should she meet the blunt, honest Elder again? "She hadn't meant anything by what she had said." Ah! she never thought how wicked it was to say so much that didn't mean anything.

The upshot of the whole matter was, that Sister Scrub "saw herself as others saw her." She ceased making apologies, and became a wisecracker and a better Christian. Elder Blunt always puts up there, always finds everything as it should be, and, with all his eccentricities, it was thought by the family most agreeable, as he is acknowledged by everybody to be the most consistent of men.

A Thrilling Incident.

Returning from a visit to New Orleans, we were fortunate to secure a passage on a fine steamer with but few passengers. Among the ladies one especially interested us. She was the widow of a wealthy planter, and was returning with only one child to her father's house. Her devotion to the child was very touching, and the eyes of her old black nurse would fill with tears as she brought her mistress "not to love that boy too much, or the Lord would take him away from her." We passed through the canal at Louisville and stopped for a few minutes at the wharf, when the nurse, wishing to see the city, walked out on the guard at the back of the boat, where by a sudden effort the child sprang from her arms into the terrible current that swept towards the falls, and disappeared immediately. The confusion which ensued attracted the attention of a gentleman who was sitting in the front part of the boat, quietly reading. Rising hastily, he asked for some article the child had worn. The nurse handed him a tiny apron she had torn off in her effort to retain the babe in her arms. Turning to a splendid Newfoundland dog, he pointed first to the apron, and then to the spot where the child had gone under. In an instant the noble dog leaped into the rushing water, and he also soon disappeared. By this time the excitement was intense, and some persons on shore, supposing that the dog was lost as well as the child, procured a boat and started off in search of the body. Just at this moment the dog was seen far away with something in his mouth. Bravely he struggled with the waves, but it was evident that his strength was fast failing, and more than one breast gave a sigh of relief as the boat reached him, and it was announced that he had the child, and it was still alive. They were brought on shore—the dog and the child. Giving a single glance to satisfy herself that the child was really living, the young mother rushed forward, and, sinking beside the dog, threw her arms around his neck and burst into tears. Not many could view the sight unmoved, and as she creased and kissed his shaggy head, she looked up to his owner and said:

"Oh, sir, I must have this dog—I am rich—take all I have—everything—but give me my child's preserver."

The gentleman smiled, and, patting his dog's head, said: "I am very glad, madam, if he has been of service to you, but nothing in the world could induce me to part with him." The dog looked as though he perfectly understood what they were talking about, and giving his sides a shake, laid himself down at his master's feet: with an expression in his large eyes that said plainer than words—"No, nothing shall part us."

OUR RESOURCES. While the people of continental Europe, and those living upon the eastern slope of the Atlantic States, have to some extent exhausted their natural sources of wealth...

STAGES FROM SALT LAKE TO THE DALLES.—A line of four-horse post coaches are to be run from Salt Lake, to the Dalles, in Oregon, to connect with the stages on the line between St. Joseph and Placerville.

TERRIBLE EXPLOSION.—A large magazine filled with powder, shells and rockets, exploded in Havana on the night of the 29th September, by which twenty persons were killed outright and ten wounded.

EMIGRATION.—The Democratic Standard of the 24th ult. says: "From every portion of the Western States we have the most encouraging assurances that a large overland emigration may be expected next year."

More New Goods.—Notwithstanding the large invoices of goods to hand by rec'd arrivals, the N. S. Perkins arrived on Wednesday evening with further supplies.

INDIAN AGENT.—The Oregon Statesman says that Mr. A. J. Cai., son of John Cai., late Agent assigned to duty in the Coast District, which includes all the Indians between the mouth of Columbia river and Cape Flattery.

THE STATES MAIL.—The mail steamer, now a week over-due, we are informed was in Columbia River on Sunday last.

THE ELECTION.—Don't forget that an election takes place to-morrow, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Orr.

THE STEAMSHIP COLUMBIA. This steamer, says the Oregon Standard of the 24th ult., about which so much solicitude has been manifested recently, was not wrecked, as erroneously reported and published; but at last accounts was lying safely at anchor in Canby bay, and is doubtless now on her way to Puget bay.

BATTLE BETWEEN SAVAGES.—The Commercial Advertiser of Honolulu says the schooner Effie brings news from the missionaries stationed in the Caroline group. Letters from the Rev. H. Bingham, who is stationed at Apia, Kusaie Island, dated in March, report a battle as having recently taken place on that island.

ACCIDENTAL CUTTING.—We are informed that on Wednesday morning, Dec. 1st, while Mr. Abraham Oulley was at work at Byrd's mill, he fell on the edge of an axe and injured on himself a very severe wound.

PUGET SOUND HERALD.

STEILACOOM, W. T., DEC. 3, 1858.

THE LAST CHANCE. To the Editor of the Puget Sound Herald: STEILACOOM, Nov. 23, 1858.

Some few weeks past I noticed in your columns an urgent appeal, requesting the press and public of California to contribute their mite in forwarding by land or water, a round dozen of good-looking daughters of Eve, to supply our scanty market here with. That such an accession to our population would be productive of much good, I hesitate not to answer in the affirmative, for no Californian ever hailed with greater joy the discovery of gold on Fraser River than we old bachelors here would, if taken by storm some fine morning by the rustling of crinolines and waltzes in our streets. Only think, Mr. Editor, what a valuable importation! Why, the thing would work on the minds of our old bachelors like a galvanic battery, and many a poor heart would be rent in twain by the electric shock. Speculation here ceases, and time only could solve the great moral effect it would have. The question, from whence this valuable invoice came, would never be asked; but where they were going to would be a matter to agitate the public mind here most powerfully. All the world, as well as the people of Washington Territory, know that in Steilacoom, Pierce county, some twenty or more wealthy bachelors reside, each and every one of whom has accumulated wealth to a greater or less extent, as their happy homes in the country will indicate.

That the ages of those bachelors differ a leafle is a matter to be expected by all rational folks; that they should be all good-looking, is so nothing not looked for by any of our female adventurers; but that they are all ready to become willing sacrifices on the altar of Love, and kneel, and keep a kneeling, at the shrine of Venus, now and forever more, is a fact which I strongly affirm, and would prove, too, had I only a chance to do so. Notwithstanding the great inducement held out to single ladies and blooming widows to better their condition here, still they keep away and come not, though every steamer arriving here is looked on to contain the precious article of forbidden fruit. The public mind is a little agitated about the matter, and sundry parties are on foot to remedy the existing evil, previous to our going down to perpetual captivity; but the cry is, "they come not." Why should all this be so? is a question naturally asked, answered and discussed, all at the same time. Surely any respectable lady arriving here could get a steady, respectable and wealthy partner through life, where she could enjoy all the blessings of a happy home and future state of life. To the question, "why don't they come?" sundry answers are given. Some here contend that the reason of the ladies not responding to it call through the columns of your journal is that all the boys are gone to the gold mines on Fraser River, and the girls are left at home to take care of the country and "Old Buck;" others, again, assert the true reason to be that Ould and his red savages have scaped all of us up here, and the poor creatures would have to take care of themselves, should they come amongst us. But some of the knowing ones, who seem to be posted on matters and things in general, treat the matter more philosophically by giving it as their opinion that the close proximity of Washington Territory to the dominions of Johnny Bull is such that were our American ladies disposed to screw up their courage to the sickening point, and come here, every little Bull in Vieto would break loose and follow in the wake of our fair ones with such ferocity that an army of aliens (I mean Irishmen, for no other nation will fight the English) would have to be called out for the purpose of administering a healthy castigation to Mr. Bull, which would have a salutary effect in keeping that gentleman at home.

But what can be done, Mr. Editor, in this awkward dilemma? Shall we go after the ladies, or shall the latter hunt us up, is the question now to decide. The best and only answer I can give to this query, and one I am sure which will cheer up the drooping spirits of many of our old sprigs, who for years have been pining away on the upper shelf, is, to perseve the following advertisement, which I clip from the Alta California, of Oct. 25th. It will shake up their old dry bones and make them wonder if one chance more is not left. But hear the guy old blade through; see what inducements she offers to the lucky dog who is fortunate enough to possess the necessary qualifications! Hear her:

WANTED—A respectable widowed lady is desirous of having a husband as a companion for herself, as a guardian for a couple of young daughters, and as a manager for a considerable amount of property, which requires a good deal of attention. She is well educated, possesses refined tastes, is healthy and hearty, possesses good looking, industrious, and a cultivated taste, and is desirous of having a husband who will take charge of her own household. Her real estate, held in her own right, is assessed at upwards of $15,000 and her daughters have nearly as much more. No notice will be taken of any reply to this unless the writer gives his full name and residence, be at least 35 years of age, have held property there all that time assessed at $10,000, and have had an excellent reputation as an honest, industrious, kind hearted man, and a good citizen. Careful examination will be made by the lady's relatives in regard to any gentleman replying to this advertisement, before giving any answer to him. Any person who can comply with all these conditions can obtain an excellent wife and some lovely daughters, by replying to this. The advertiser moves in excellent society, has occupied her present home for twelve years, and can give a multitude of the best references. All communications will be treated with sacred confidence by the lady and her relatives. Address "M. A. I.," care of "W. A. W.," Alta office, San Francisco.

Now, Mr. Editor, you know, I know, and everybody knows, that there are plenty of single men here, who answer all the qualifications required, and are ready and willing at any moment to proceed with the thing immediately; for it would be morally wrong on their part to lose sight of so rare a chance. If I had I would offer myself to the lady with the two handsome daughters, but I can't "come in." First, I am not "35 years of age;" second, I have not resided here "5 years;" and, third, though not last, I don't pay taxes on that "$10,000," which is so necessary to the future comfort of mankind. I know who does, though, and to him I would say, lose not one moment in sending your bids off by the next steamer, and, my head for it, if the matter is conducted as a strict business operation, that the wealthy widow, and her two beautiful daughters, will figure at the next fancy dress ball given for the Casey Literary Association at Steilacoom. Permit me to state, Mr. Editor, for the benefit of him who should answer the advertisement in question, that, should he need any further information on the subject, he can call on you for my address, when I shall be most happy to consult with him in private. I would further remark, that, from my long residence in California, and the knowledge I have gained of the wanderings, pourings, and out-of-the-way doings in San Francisco, I am certain I know the initials of my fair friend "W. A. J.," and would wish to consult with the applicant before doing anything rash. I will add, by way of inducement, that should my friend the "Doc." succeed in getting the widow, I speak first for the hand of one of the "beautiful daughters," when, with the blessing of God, myself and my stepfather, the "Doc.," in ten months from now will each of us be able to exhibit in your sanctum some fine specimens of young Americans; and, if my stepfather takes his bid, he is going to be a whopper. I tell you. Oh! Doctor, darling, your hair is black, You're a just of the first water; If you marry the widow and bring over, By St. Patrick! I'm in for the usage. AM-O.

A graduate, who had taken high honors at the University, was selected, on account of his known attainments and learning, as incumbent of a new church in a populous parish.

Many physicians are habitually rude in their intercourse with their patients, yet few would hazard so unfeeling a speech as is recorded of a celebrated Florentine doctor.

A physician having prescribed for a patient, called upon him a short time afterwards to see how he was getting along.

'Why' said the patient, indignantly, 'didn't you tell me to take pills and bark?'

A young lady who wore spectacles, exclaimed in a voice of sentimental enthusiasm to a young plowman who was walking the road.

'What are you thinking about?' asked one laborer of another.

A fellow laboring along a turnpike road, under a heavy load of inebriety, was asked what made him stagger so, and gave this answer.

The Boston Post perpetrates the following: 'It is said of Eugene Sue that, though a professional socialist, he lived like a prince.'

'Where was I, ma, when you married pa?' said a little urchin to his mother, as he stood gazing upon his drunken and prostrate father.

'May I be married, ma?' said a little beauty to her mother.

'Ma, said a little urchin, 'I think there's one thing God can't do.'

'They say trout will bite now, father,' said a sporting youth.

The young lady who fancied that cucumbers grew in slices was recently married to the young gentleman who sent over to St. Petersburg a large cargo of heartstones for cleaning the steps of Russia.

A little child in church, observing the minister to be very vehement in his words and gestures, cried out: 'Mother, why don't they let the man out of the box?'

Why are persons blind from their birth unfit for carpenters? Because they never see.

Did you ever know a young single lady that did not expect to get married?

WHAT-CHEER HOUSE, SAN FRANCISCO.

If you have business of any kind to transact, it is not important that you should endeavor to get as near as possible to where business of all kinds is done in the city?

Do you want to patronize a house conducted on strictly temperate principles? Do you want to stop at an establishment favorably known throughout California, Oregon, and all other places for its moderate charges, good and the best of beds, together with order, comfort, convenience, and superior accommodations?

If you do these all these, we advise you to go to the WHAT-CHEER HOUSE.

THE PROPRIETOR OF THIS WELL known and old established house is still at his old tri-ke of feeding the public at the low price of six dollars per week, and still they come to the price of his good and well furnished table, and as Mr. Kelly is one of the pioneer hotel keepers of this city, he pledges himself that there will be nothing wanting at his home to make the public comfortable.

There is an extensive Library and Reading Room, well supplied with papers, periodicals, &c. THE HOUSE IS OPEN ALL NIGHT. Travelers will please remember that there are no runners connected with this establishment. The What-Cheer House is conducted on strictly temperate principles.
