TELEGRAMS.

Some Discouraging Figures.

The Commercial Bulletin says: The possession of the Panama railroad is sine qua non to construction of the Panama canal as it affords necessary working basis. It will however cost the canal company 70 million francs with the payment by the United States of one million dollars for the right of way for the four hundred million francs, which according to Paris advices is proposed to issue, leaving only 30 million francs towards the cost of the work which Lemps engineer estimated at 84 million francs and numerous other expenditures amounting to fully 200 million.

The Glancy-McIntire Affair.

The Times reviewing the Glancy-McIntire affair says: There seems to be no doubt that McIntire's course, brutal and so manifestly unjust to hold the district attorneyship or any other office of trust or decency, that it was the plain duty of Glancy, an independent politician, to declare his unworthiness to the party.

John R. Hinchey, of Boston, gave his views upon the present condition of the shipping trade of the country and the best way to revive it. He said that the shipping trade of the country is in a state of depression, and that the best way to revive it is to encourage the employment of apprentices on ships of the United States.

Never Judge by Appearances. A Seelye coat may cover a heart in full bloom.

Sunlight and Sleep.

BY DR. RICHARDSON.

Whether your home be large or small give it light. There is no house so likely to be unhealthy as a dark and gloomy house. In a dark and gloomy house you can never see the dirt that pollutes it. Dirt accumulates on dirt, and the mind soon learns to apologize for this condition because the gloom conceals it. "It is no credit to be clean in this hole of a place," is soon the sort of idea that the housewife gets into her mind; that place is always dingy, do what you may," is another similar and common idea; and so in a dark house unwholesome things get stowed away and forgotten, and the air becomes impure, the digestive organs become imperfect in action, and soon there is some shade of bad health engendered in those persons who live in that dark house. Flowers will not healthily bloom in a dark house, and flowers are, as a rule, good indices. We put the flowers in our windows that they may see the light. Are not our children worth many flowers? They are the choicest of flowers. Then again light is necessary in order that the animal spirits may be kept refreshed and invigorated. No one is truly happy who in waking hours is in a gloomy house or room. The old man in the prison has been considered as a part of the punishment of the prison, and it is so. The mind is saddened in a home that is not flushed with light, and when the mind is saddened the whole physical powers soon suffer; the heart beats languidly, the lungs flow slow, the breathing is imperfect, the oxidation of the blood is reduced, and the conditions are laid for the development of many wearisome and unnecessary constitutional failures and sufferings.

Once again, light, sunlight I mean, is of itself useful to health in a direct manner.

Sunlight favors nutrition; sunlight favors nervous function; sunlight sustains, chemically or physically, the healthy state of the blood. Children and older persons living in darkened places become blanched and pale; they have none of the ruddy, healthy bloom of those who live in light. We send a child that has lived in a dark court in London for a few days only into the sunlight, and how marked is the change. We hardly know the face again.

Let us keep then, this world in our mind, light, light, light; sunlight which feeds us with its influence and leaves no poisonous vapors in its train.

Before I leave this subject, I want to say a word about light in relation to the sick. A few hundred years ago it being a fashion, for reasons it is very hard to venture to place sick people in dark and closely curtained bedrooms. The practice to some extent is continued with this day. When a person goes to bed with sickness it is often the first thing to pull down the blinds of the windows, to put on dark blinds, or if there be Venetian blinds to close them. On body and spirit alike this practice is simply pernicious. It may be well, if light is painful to the eyes of the sufferer, to shield the eyes from the light, or even shut the light out of the room altogether; but for the sake of this to shut it out of all the room, to cut off wholesome air, to deprive the patient of the fresh air which he needs, to make the sick-room a dark cell in which all kinds of impurities may be concealed day after day, is an offense to nature which she ever rebukes in the sternest manner.

These remarks proceed with special force in cases where epidemic and contagious diseases are suffering, for these affections, as they are, are unwholesome, and the agent of health. In sickness and in health, in infancy, youth, middle age, old age, in all seasons, for the benefit of the mind and for the welfare of the body, sunlight is a bearer and sustainer of health.

To secure the entrance of sunlight, every house should have a plentiful supply of large windows, and not an opportunity of any kind should be lost to let in light to every room.

The introduction of daylight reflectors has been in late years, a very great and useful advance. The dark basements of town houses can be so often completely lighted by these reflectors, that I wonder they are not universally demanded in places where their action is effective. The light they afford is steady, often actually bright, and always pure.

I have been speaking about sunlight, and am led by this to refer to another and allied topic, I mean night and hours of sleep. If it be good to make all possible use of sunlight, it is equally good to make as little use as possible of artificial light. Artificial light, so far, have been sources of waste, not only of the material out of which they are made, but of the air on which they burn. In the air of the closed room the present commonly used lamps, candles and gaslights, rob our air of a part of its vital constituents, and supply in return products which are really injurious to life. Gaslight is in this respect most hurtful, but the others are bad when they are long kept burning in an open room. The lower hours of the night are spent in artificial light; the better; and this suggests, of itself, that within reasonable limits the sooner we go to rest after dark the better. We require in the cold season of winter when the nights are long, much more of sleep than we do in the summer. On the longest day of the year, seven hours of sleep is sufficient for most men and women who are in the prime of life. On the shortest day, nine hours of sleep is

ARIZONA.

Progress of the S. P. H. R. Business.

TUCSON, Oct. 8.—The track of the S. P. H. R. in Arizona is rapidly increasing. Tucson is crowded. Every available house is occupied and building is going on every section of the city. The trade is up and from Arizona has more than quadrupled in volume. The S. P. H. R. of Mexico has established four new customs houses near the Arizona line to check smuggling, each to be valued at $100,000.

The Head Center mine of Tombstone has made a strike on the 800 foot level in the west drift.

The Head Center mine of Tombstone has made a strike on the 800 foot level in the west drift, 200 feet from the main shaft. The new drift is reported to be four and a half feet wide of very rich ore. The mine is now being worked by the Tombstone Mining Company. The mine is now being worked by the Tombstone Mining Company.

Not the Only Fool.

It is stated that a prominent citizen of Galveston, Texas was brought home very late in a comatose condition. His terrified wife, thinking it was apoplexy, sent for the family physician. The doctor examined the patient carefully, and then directed that the clergyman be sent for. In a few minutes the spiritual adviser was bending over the couch of the dying man. Finally the clergyman said: "Why, he is drunk! That's what's the matter. Why am I sent for here at 12 o'clock at night?"

Do you suppose,

"that I am going to be the only fool in Galveston?"

That's the story they tell.

Women—savers of our griefs and our pocket-books, companions of our joys and our poverty, worshippers of our pride and our position, blatters of our genius and our aspirations, emulators of our example and imitators of our few virtues, the world would be a barren waste without them, and men would stand a poor chance of being here. Let us think well of women in general and one woman in particular.—New Haven Register.

Not overmuch, and for those who are weakly, ten or eleven hours may be taken with real advantage. In winter, children should always have ten to twelve hours sleep. It is not idleness to indulge to that extent, but an actual saving, a storing up of invigorated existence for the future. Such rest can only be obtained by going to bed very early, say at half-past eight o'clock or nine.

It is wrong as ever it can be that our legislators should often be sitting up, as we know they do, times after times, in the dead of night, trying against life to legislate for life. It is most foolish that public writers who hold so many responsibilities in their hands should be called upon to exercise their craft at a time when all their nature is calling out to them rest, rest, rest! It is said I am foolish for declaring these things. Is it so? I am standing by Nature, speaking under her direction, and without a thought of dogmatism. I am driven to ask: May it not be the world that is foolish?—the world, I mean, of fashion and habit which could, if it would, change the present system as easy as it criticizes the view that it ought to make. Anyhow, this I know, and it is the truth that I would here express, that in every man, woman and child there is, at or about the early time I have named, a persistent periodical desire for a nap, which steals on determinately, which takes at the flood, leads to a good sound night's rest, and which resisted never duly returns, but is replaced by a surreptitious sleep, broken by wearing dreams, restless limbs, and but partial restoration of vigor. I have said, before, make the sun your fellow-workman. I do not say go to bed at all seasons with the sun and rise with it, because in this climate that would not be all possible; but I say as a general principle, as closely as you can, make the sun your fellow-workman; follow him as soon as you are able, to rest, and do not let him stare at you in bed many hours after he has commenced his daily course. Teach your children, moreover, this same lesson, and the practice of it, whereupon there will be, in a generation or two, even in this land of fogs and dullness, a race of children of the sun, who will stand in matter of health, a head and shoulders above the children of the present generation.

He Resembled the Old Man.

A good story was recently told at military quarters about young Jesse Grant, who had just returned to Galena from the West. Jesse went through a number of Arizona mining towns, and was given some prominence. At one place a big, burly, profane and dissipated miner who had sold a 8000 claim, and was in town having a high old time, took a drunken notion to distinguish himself by thrashing young Grant, who is small and of light build.

The big miner came up the street, cursing as he came, and swaggered into a restaurant where Jesse was sitting, and approaching a young and well dressed man, evidently not a native of those "diggings," who was at a table near the entrance, who slapped him heavily on the shoulder and exclaimed:

"Look here, youngster, how many bits to the dollar?"

The stranger addressed quietly laid down his knife and fork, deliberately eyed the intruder for a full minute, and suddenly resolved himself into an Arizona whirlwind. All in the space of a second or so the big miner was knocked down several times. He stood upon, upon his clothes partially torn off, and with both eyes closed, dazed and bewildered, was thrown into the street.

The stranger quietly returned to his knife and fork, and the miner remarked, as he picked himself up and peered curiously into the door:

"Durned of the youngster don't resemble the old man!"

Where the Loss Was.

A young man who belonged to an excursion party, visiting Detroit, called at the City Hall to make complaint to the Chief of Police that he had been robbed of his watch.

"What sort of a watch was it?" inquired the Chief.

"Well, it was a kinder old-fashioned, but it kept the straightest time you ever saw. Every clock within four miles of our house was run by that watch."

"What was it worth?"

"Well, I'd been offered seven dollars for it."

"It isn't such a great loss, then?"

"It isn't the money value that hurts me, though I don't care to lose seven dollars any more than any other man. You see, it was the only time-piece we had to run our prayer meeting by, and when the Deacon rose up and asked me what time it was, the minister began to haul out that ticker every other young man dropped his head, and every gal pricked up her ears and asked for me to beat her home. It made me solid all along the town-line and put me ahead at country dances, and I've got to get it back or go home and tell the folks that came across a blamed fool and sold it for a twenty."

"And you wouldn't do that?"

"I might, you know, but the minister the old man wanted to give me his note for nineteen of it. I'd have to own up or shake his paper, and dad's a man who backs his notes with a flat as big as the top of your hat."

"Why didn't you get some eggs from the hen's nests this morning?" asked a farmer of his son, who answered: "Because there weren't any. If the hens laid any they mislaid 'em, so they can't be found."

PUGET SOUND MAIL.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1880.

FOR
PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

JAMES A. GARFIELD.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT:
CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

FOR DELEGATE TO CONGRESS:
THOMAS H. BRENTS.

THE PRESIDENTIAL PARTY.—This has been a most eventful week in the history of Puget Sound, owing to the presence of the worthy Chief Magistrate of the Nation, President Hayes. The principal reception on the Sound was given him at Seattle, where he arrived on last Monday afternoon amid the plaudits and acclaim of the people of that city and delegations from the neighboring towns, including our own little city of La Conner. About five thousand people took part in the reception at Seattle, and the city and harbor decorations, together with the fleet of steamers which went out to escort the Presidential Party to the landing, was gay and imposing beyond all precedent on the Sound, as it was eminently proper it should be. Chief Justice Greene delivered the address of welcome. On Tuesday morning the party visited the Port Blakely Sawmill, where President Hayes, Secretary Ramsey and General Sherman superintended the sawing into lumber a huge log 150 feet in length. When reduced to a square of 12 inches, Mr. Renton, the proprietor of the mill, presented it to Mrs. Hayes, and will in due time be forwarded to the East. Mr. Renton insisted upon putting the distinguished sawyers on his payroll, and President Hayes, Secretary Ramsey and General Sherman signed the pay-roll for $1 each. This was probably the most novel incident of the whole Presidential tour. From Blakely they went to Port Townsend, the port of entry, where another grand reception was given, Doctor T. T. Minor, mayor of the city, delivering the address of welcome. They left Port Townsend on Wednesday and cruised to San Juan, and then through Deception Pass to Utsalady, where they tied up for the night. The La Conner delegation, on board the steamer Fannie Lake, en route for home, arrived at Utsalady just as the Presidential Party was about to leave, and had the pleasure of another greeting from his Excellency. From here they steamed direct for Tacoma, where a special train was in readiness to whirl them to Portland, there to take the steamer for San Francisco.

The President has everywhere expressed himself highly pleased with the cordial and hearty greeting received from our people, and gratified at the great and inexhaustible resources of our Territory. If President Hayes will do us the honor of becoming a citizen of Washington Territory on his retirement from the Presidency, we shall elect him our first Senator in Congress on our admission into the Union, which event cannot now be much longer deferred. In this complimentary allusion to our worthy Chief Magistrate we have no doubt the MAIL is only giving expression to the unanimous sentiment of all with whom he has mingled during the past week or two.

THE OHIO AND INDIANA ELECTIONS. (last Tuesday) have gone Republican. Definite returns have not yet reached us, but such as are at hand indicate that the Republican majority in Ohio is some twenty thousand, with 13 or 15 out of 19 Congressmen. The result in Indiana is somewhat in doubt, but it is reported to have gone Republican by at least 1,000 majority, with a gain of two or three Congressmen.

The Seattle and Walla Walla Railroad has been sold to Mr. Villard, and great things are expected to result to the Territory therefrom.

GENERAL GRANT'S SPEECH.—General Grant's speech at Warren, Ohio, is a decided success. It is very plain and simple, but full of strong sense. He is a Republican, he says, because the Republican party "is a national party seeking the greatest good to the greatest number of its citizens." And he defines the difference between the two parties in a significant and telling way. "There is not," he says, "a precinct in this vast nation where a Democrat cannot cast his ballot and have it counted as cast. No matter what is the predominance of the opposite party, he can proclaim his political opinions, even if he is only one American, without fear and without proscription. There are fourteen States, and localities in some others, where Republicans have not this privilege. This is one reason why I am a Republican." He then proceeds to give other reasons, in the faithfulness of the Democracy, in its abandonment of principle, in its alliances with all the wreckers and repudiators, in its intolerance, in its dishonesty, in its addiction to fraud, in its hatred and opposition to free institutions. He exposes the utter lack of consistency in the professions and positions of the party. He says it is "united in but one thing, and that is in getting control of the Government in all its branches. It is for internal improvement at the expense of the Government in one section, and against it in another. It favors the repudiation of solemn engagements in one section, and the honest payment of its debts in another, where the public will not tolerate any other view. It favors fiat money in one place, and good money in another. Finally, it favors the 'pooling of all issues' not favored by the Republicans, to the end that it may secure the one principle upon which the party is a most harmonious unit, namely, gaining control of the Government in all its branches." This is a truthful and pregnant characterization of the present condition of the Democracy, and General Grant has shown in this speech that although he has figured all through his long public career as "the silent man," he knows how to speak effectively enough when the occasion arises. He predicts that the solid South will be broke up, but he declares that "this desirable solution can only be obtained by the defeat, and the continued defeat, of the Democratic party as it is now constructed."

NEW YORK FOR GARFIELD.—It is conceded by all parties that New York is the pivotal State in the coming Presidential election. The Republicans may lose it and yet triumph if they carry Indiana. The Democrats cannot lose New York without the absolute certainty of defeat, even allowing that they secure every Southern State, and their chances of failure in several of those States are at least equal to the Republican chances of failure in New Jersey, Connecticut and Indiana. The situation, then, in New York is of the utmost importance to the Democracy. The State is claimed by leading men of both parties with equal confidence. Conkling says it will surely be for Garfield. John Kelly thinks the recent closing of the breach between Tammany and anti-Tammany makes it certain for Hancock. The shrewdest and coolest-headed Republican politician in the Empire State since Seward's day is Governor Cornell, and less than a month ago he assured Emory Storrs that the defeat of Garfield there is an impossibility. The opinion of a man who never allows his wishes to get the upper hand of his judgment, and who, from his high position, has superior means of informing his judgment, is of great weight, and it is worth while to give the reasons he gave for such an opinion. In the first place, he says the great financial, commercial and manufacturing interests are all for the Republican party; and they are all now running full-handed everywhere in the State. To these he adds the agricultural and transportation interests, which have enjoyed more prosperity during the last year or two than at any other time; and that prosperity is generally attributed to the policies of the National Republican party. Another powerful item in estimating the chances of success is that the Republicans are in possession of all the patronage and influence of the State and Federal Government. The Herald, which took a neutral stand early in the campaign, but which has been giving the Democrats the benefit of some very good counsel, appears to side with Governor Cornell in opinion.

The Democrats are getting restive over the parsimony of their candidate for Vice-President. It seems that English was relied upon to open his "barrel" and to deal out its contents quite liberally to insure success in Indiana, but he is as close-fisted as a miser. So indignant have the Bourbons become over this illiberality that they threaten to haul down English's name from the ticket should Indiana be lost to them in October.

Democratic Predictions.

[New York Commercial.] They predicted that secession would be peaceable. They predicted that the States would not respond to President Lincoln's call for militia. They predicted that the militia would refuse to cross the Potomac and invade Virginia. They predicted that money could not be raised to sustain the army. They predicted that the people would not take the greenback. They predicted that the greenback dollar would be valueless as rags. They predicted that grass would grow in the streets of New York. They predicted that England and France would form an alliance with the South to secure cotton. They predicted that a "poverty-stricken people in the North would compel the government to terminate the war." They predicted that Grant would never capture Richmond. They predicted that the war for the Union would be a failure. They predicted that the confederates would never be overthrown. They predicted that the people would never ratify the amendments to the Constitution. They predicted that the freed negroes would become a race of paupers. They predicted that the people would never permit the black men at the ballot box. They predicted that the war would terminate in a vast standing army and a military dictator. They predicted that the child was unborn who would live to see gold or silver returned to the currency of the country. They predicted that the interest on the vast public debt could never be paid. They predicted that specie payments would not be resumed on the 1st of January, 1879. They predicted that the resumption of specie payments would bring universal disaster and ruin upon the business and industries of the country.

GOVERNOR FOSTER OF OHIO has written a letter to a friend in New Jersey, in which, arguing against a change in the administration of the Government, he says: "Why take the chances of a change? Why isn't it wise to permit this great party to remain in power that has saved the life of the nation; that has given liberty to four millions of God's people; that proclaims the protection of its flag to all, irrespective of condition, thus giving every man a fair chance in the race of life; the party of liberty and equality, of honest money, protection to American industry, free and fair elections and an honest count; the party of grand achievements in arms, in finance and in administration? Let well enough alone; let prosperity continue; take not the chances of endangering the welfare of the country by putting into power a party of dangerous antecedents—a party that forgets nothing and learns nothing."

SOOTHING SENTIMENTS.—Blackburn of Kentucky is reported to have said in a recent speech in Ohio: "Let the radicals cease their brawling about the solid South. She is solid, thank God! She was solid for Jeff. Davis in 1860, and she will be solid for Hancock in 1880." We hardly know which that remark is hardest upon—the South or Hancock. As for Blackburn, he is the amiable gentleman who during the rebellion attempted to introduce the yellow fever into the North, through the medium of infected clothing; and his fellow-citizens of Kentucky testified their appreciation of this distinguished service by electing him Governor of their State. It is therefore quite in character for him to speak as he is reported, but it is somewhat interesting to know how General Hancock enjoys being bracketed with Jefferson Davis. If he followed the campaign closely he must sometimes be tempted to doubt which side he fought on during the "late unpleasantness."—Record-Union.

The secretary of the treasury has in reply to an inquiry given the following information prepared in the bureau of statistics regarding the immigration at ports of various sections of the country during ten years from June 30, 1870: Arrived at Atlantic ports north of Cape Henry, Va., 2,131,432; Atlantic ports south of Cape Henry, 34,662; gulf ports, 47,239; lake ports, 485,025; Pacific ports, 145,879; total 2,712,176. The total arrivals of immigrants at southern ports amounted to 49,901, and constitute 1 1/2 per cent of the total immigration.

GENERAL GRANT has written a letter to Mexico, urging that the Government of that country encourage the building of railroads in directions specified, and declaring that such a course would promote her commerce with the United States and augment the income of Mexico from $18,000,000 to $80,000,000.

A HUMMING-BIRD flew into a Court-room in Georgia during the session of the Court one day recently, at 10 1/2 A. M., and continued to fly within a few inches of the ceiling until 6 P. M., when it fell slowly and lightly on a mantelpiece, where it was captured. It was on the wing seven and a half hours with out rest.

SENATOR CONKLING is in Ohio, and will, by his powerful speeches, help to remind the inhabitants of the Buckeye State that the Democrats of to-day are not a whit different from those that supported Val-landigham when he received such a signal overthrow.

LOCAL NEWS AND COMMENTS.

The Mail has entered into arrangements with the San Francisco Chronicle whereby subscribers may obtain both papers for one year for $3.50.

ANOTHER REPUBLICAN MEETING FOR LA CONNER.—On next Monday evening at 7 P. M., Irving Ballard, Esq., Republican candidate for Prosecuting Attorney, and Doctor T. T. Minor of Port Townsend will speak at the Courthouse at La Conner.

A WORD TO REPUBLICANS.—The "Burke boom" appears to be quite exhausted on Puget Sound. There is more than the ordinary enthusiasm manifested for Brents and Ballard everywhere, and particularly in Seattle.

WE congratulate our fellow-townsmen on this happy alliance, and extend to the bride, who comes some five thousand miles from home, a hearty welcome.

NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE.—The Seattle Post now takes the Associated Press dispatches the same as the Portland Oregonian, virtually making it the equal of the Oregonian as a newspaper and, in fact, superior to that paper to Puget Sound readers having daily mail facilities.

A TERRIFIC LAND SLIDE took place a few days ago on Fraser River near Cash Creek, completely damming the river to the height of fifty feet, and leaving the river for miles below entirely dry.

SCHOOL LAND.—In a letter of recent date the Commissioner of the General Land Office says: "In reply I have to state that Sections 16 and 39 in the Territory of Dakota, known as School Sections, are not subject to settlement, lien or sale, and any person trespassing thereon is liable to prosecution under the laws of the United States; and if the proper Territorial authorities will furnish this Department with information as to the occupation and cultivation of said section, giving the names of the trespassers, a description of the tract or tracts trespassed upon, and time when the trespass was committed, the same will receive prompt attention."

MR. W. A. JENNINGS, the leading grocery merchant of Seattle, advertises in this week's Mail, in his card (on the 2d page) will be found a large list of staple articles, with the price marked extremely low. Let our readers examine the list and see for themselves what extraordinary inducements Mr. Jennings offers to purchasers.

THE attention of the citizens of Whatcom County is respectfully called to the card announcing Prof. A. T. Burnell as independent candidate for School Superintendent.

THE price of oats has considerably fallen in San Francisco during the past week. Now is a bad time to ship.

INDIAN TROUBLES.—A telegram from Dudley Henry, of this city, U. S. Deputy surveyor, to Capt. McMillen, surveyor general, dated Oct. 6th, has been received, as follows: "The Indians have stopped the survey on Skagit River. They threaten to kill the whole party. Everett and Baker were attacked yesterday and shot two Indians in self-defense."

FROM the best information at hand we believe this Indian scare greatly exaggerated. There is no very serious trouble on the Skagit. Still, it will do no harm to have the troops visit that region, and have a little wa-wa with Poor Lo.

THE schooner Mary Parker has been chartered to carry 600 tons of iron ore from the Texada (British Columbia) iron mine for the Port Townsend Iron Smelting works. It seems that the ore at Port Townsend is what is commonly called bog or clay ore, and will not of itself make good marketable iron.

MEDICAL LAKE.—Much is being said in the papers just now about Medical Lake in Washington Territory, which seems to be a sort of modern Bethesda, to which the lame, the halt, and the blind move, hoping to get relief.

A SKETCH.

There is a land—a lonely place—
No tree or flower is there to grace
Its flat and bare and parched face;
And every
The darkening shadows briskly chase
Each other over

The glancing streams that were, are not,
And though no more a lush bouquet,
A hidden stream runs clear beneath
That hard dry crust—
And some secret from its sheath,
Will lay the dust.

The burning sun lays bare the beach,
And though no more a lush bouquet,
A hidden stream runs clear beneath
That hard dry crust—
And some secret from its sheath,
Will lay the dust.

A heart though young and ofttime gay,
For lack of love may fade away;
Its own pure love of more than
Then nearly gone,
May meet a kindred heart one day,
And join in one.

A Woman's Checkered Career.

Mrs. Abijah Smith is dead. This ends a career strangely because of varied lights and shadows—a veritable Gibraltar. On the high fortified rock of Gibraltar, there was born to the noble house of Gannettcliff, in the summer of 1793, an heiress, upon whom with ceremony and pomp was bestowed the Christian name of Isabella. This infant is she who this afternoon, at the age of 87, is given a last resting place at Montrose. Four years passed in the life of the child-heiress of Gannettcliff, and a dreadful epidemic that scourged "the rock," left her doubly an orphan; both father and mother were lost to her, and by adoption she became a member of a certain noble Spanish family who gave much more care to all else than moral or mental culture. She was in possession of her father's large estates, and with every attention given to her whims and willfulness, her development was rapid even for that time; at 12 she was married, at 13 was a mother, and at 17 was a widow with four children. Her husband was Jose De Sa Manos, a Spanish gentleman of leisure, the victim of a duel entered into upon her account. Not long thereafter to the death of De Sa Manos, three of his four children died; thus was his widow left with but one relative in the world. This was a daughter, christened Inez, who in accordance with the written will of her father, was assigned to the care of a Catholic sisterhood in Paris, for instruction such as was deemed best. To the daughter went all the father's property, and Isabella was once more "adorned in the world," with no tie to bind her to the prudent life that should have been hers.

The season of 1815 was a brilliant one at Gibraltar, and visitors were there from all over the world—among others Captain George Walker, the owner of an American training vessel, and brother of Commodore Walker of the United States Navy. At a ball given by the American Consul, Captain Walker met Madame De Sa Manos, and despite the opposition of her friends, she was the "greatest flirt in Gibraltar," within two weeks he carried her off as his bride. Turning all of her convertible property into gold, she sailed with her new lord to Philadelphia, and her rank in his country was high, he being directly connected with the Wintropes and others of the first families of New England, and he was possessed of much wealth, having a really excellent trade between New York, Philadelphia and southern ports. The married life of Captain and Mrs. Walker was, however, not all sunshine. It extended over two score years; the first fourth of which the lady was exceedingly glad in the constant company of her husband, sailing with him on every voyage, and being so far master of navigation that, according to her boast of after years, she was on one occasion, with the gallant Captain seriously injured and below deck, able to save the vessel from the fury of a gulf storm. But the time came when she tired of sea life, and while her husband continued to sail, she deemed it much more agreeable to shine in social circles at Saratoga and Niagara in the summer and at Washington and other centers when the snow came. Rumors of intrigue reached the ears of Captain Walker when far tides would bring him home, and frequent and bitter were the scenes of domestic infelicity. At Washington she shone with the circle that attracted the foremost men of the nation. "Andrew Jackson," said she, "has pleased with me for favor, and more than one senator has prayed me to notice his cause. Martin Van Buren time and again singled me out in crowded drawing-rooms imploring me to give him a monopoly of my society. I knew Clay and Webster and Benton and Calhoun and Randolph—all of the great men of the day—I knew them well."

Such boasts were evidently not baseless; the lady to the day of her death retained a packet of letters in which words of admiration—and, indeed, sentiments even more decided—appeared, connected with the autographs of the men she mentioned as among her devotees. And there were eloquent epistles from others almost their peers. General Winfield Scott appeared, perhaps not to advantage, in a billet that would have better become an ardent country swain. N. P. Willis, the poet, writes pleading for an interview, pouring out his "feelings unspeakable" in a half dozen stanzas, which, by the way, are to be found in a subsequent published volume of his poems. There are other letters from other men of prominence in the political, literary and social world of a half-century ago, but there is no demand for their publication. Not all of Mrs. Walker's time was spent in this country; she crossed the Atlantic seven times before she was 40, and in the first society of London and Paris she was conspicuous many seasons. And she made many conquests—"harmless they were," she ever averred, as in her latter days she recalled them.

In 1854 Captain Walker died, but his widow remained for three years when she accepted the suit of Abijah Smith of this city, and came from New York to become mistress of that local celebrity's home on Golden Hill. The marriage was an unhappy one. When, by an explosion at his saw-mill, Smith was seriously injured, the home was broken up, his wife chafing under the restraints put upon her by an invalid husband. While yet she was Mrs. Walker, she had made a "dash" in Wall street, and leaving Golden Hill, she continued her speculation in Erie, Reading and Panama. "I would never touch other stocks," she declared, "I know what I was about, and I did not come out a 'lame duck'; I doubled my fortune in two years." One of her friends at that time, "on change" was the Hon. Abram S. Hewitt, who managed the National Democratic campaign four years ago, and who is now one of the Representatives of this State in Congress.

During the past twenty years Mrs. Smith has for the most part made her home in this city, though not as the helpmeet of her husband, who died last year. The property that she held at her marriage she retained in her own right, and thus was entirely free from dependence. Recently her husband's years weighed heavily upon her, and she grew testy and at times sullen and morose. Without one of a kin in all the world, she gave little care to the amenities of life as deserved by those with whom she had to do. The daughter, Inez, died long years ago in a convent, and save when recalling that daughter, or recounting social triumphs of the past, Mrs. Smith was seldom an agreeable companion; and with her better nature had gone also the beauty of face, stateliness of form, and other graces that gave her prominence and power in days bygone. It was her boast that the leading artist of France had pleaded long and eloquently to have her sit to him; three times had her arm—and such an arm!—been used to plaster a model for sculptors of renown. But time wrought a change; her features were shrunken, and other evidences there were innumerable that the beauty and power of other days had altogether passed.—Kingston Freeman.

Here is a touching incident: Jessie Hill, aged eight, and Carrie Beers, aged six, were fatally burned at Bradford, Pa. Carrie was taken to her home two blocks away. At 2:30 o'clock Jessie died, calling for Carrie to come; half an hour later Carrie died, and the last words she uttered were: "Wait for me, Jessie; I am coming." This singular coincidence in two dying children some distance away from each other, is verified by the most indisputable evidence.

COMICAL TELEGRAPHIC BLUNDERS.

Some person writing about telegraphy has given a few amusing instances in which a slight error in spacing, or the running of dots into lines in the telegraphic signs, has occasioned strange mistakes in a message. A gentleman who had gone to the country to find a summer location for his family telegraphed to his wife, "Home to-night." The wires rendered this into "Come tonight," and so the wife posted into the country at once, while the husband was making his way in a contrary direction. The writer omits some of the most comical errors on record. Not long since, a message came to the principal of a business house in this city from his traveling agent, who had reached Philadelphia—"Am at Continental Hotel. Send some hash by mail." The agent did not intend to reflect on the food at the hotel, but wanted "cash" sent him by mail. An affectionate uncle was informed by telegraph—"Mary is to be buried on Wednesday. Come sure." Mary, who lived in Chicago, was his favorite niece, and as he had not heard of her illness, the sad intelligence gave him a severe shock. He dressed himself in deep mourning, and made a hurried journey to the West to find a jovial party assembled at Mary's wedding. The wires had arranged for her to be "married" instead of "married." Probably the worst blunder ever made was one that occurred in the case of a St. Louis merchant, who, while in New York, received a telegram informing him that his wife was ill. He sent a message to his family doctor, asking the nature of the sickness, and if there was any danger, and received promptly the answer: "No danger. Your wife has had a child. If we can keep her from having another to-night she will do well." The mystification of the agitated husband was not removed until a second inquiry revealed the fact that his indisposed lady had had a "chill."—The Hour.

A little girl who was disappointed because her name could not be found in Bible, says: "Never mind! I will be a good girl that if ever another Bible is written, my name shall go into it."

A Word to our Readers.

When you read of a remedy that will cure all diseases beware of it; but when you read of a pure vegetable compound which claims to cure only certain parts of the body, do not be misled by high proof that it does this, you can safely try it with the assurance that it will help you. This is just what Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure does. It cures all troubles of the lower portion of the body and none others. It will not help the tooth-ache, ear-ache, nor consumption, but will put your system on a healthy and healthy state where you can enjoy life and appreciate its good things. Try it.
