WHY SHOULD WE STUDY LATIN?

A. T. BURNELL, A. M.
 The first requirement placed upon an advocate is to prove the value of that for which he pleads. As an advocate of the study of Latin, we accept the requirement, and urge chiefly two kinds of benefit: That of giving new light on our own language, and as a discipline for the mind. There is no better study than the Latin, as a help to the meaning of English words and as a clue to much of their intricate spelling, since 13,000 words come to us from the Latin. From one point to another it is interesting to follow the derivatives, e. g.: 'specia,' which gives upwards of 200 terms, such as special, species, specter, speculation; then with prefixes, expect, inspect, respect, aspect, suspect, &c. But it is not necessary to learn columns of Latin forms in order to be helped by this study. There are underlying principles of the first importance, which—illustrated by the details in a few instances—give a knowledge of their general application. An apprentice working in the shop at first trains his arm to work, then his eye to direct and his mind to plan. After patient toil he comes to the application of his increased strength and new ideas until the young cabinet maker produces tables, desks, and bureaus. Yet as he leaves the shop, an independent journeyman, he cannot be said to have made all the articles of household furniture in its myriad and changing forms. But from a careful, exact knowledge of a few he can construct and plan others. So with the student who acquires a thorough knowledge of principles with the added power of adapting them. This applies especially to a study of language. In a single instance, let us follow out the stem: From 'caput,' head, come capital, head of a state; captain, head of a company; cape, head of land extending into water; caption, heading of a chapter; cap, a covering for one's head; capture, to seize, as by the head; capitulate, to yield the head.
 The English—latest of European dialects, has arisen from a strange mixture of the many languages of the past, gaining some excellence from each—as does the piano from the twenty woods and metals which compact to give strength, beauty, force and harmony. The presence of a variety of elements makes the English rich in synonyms, words nearly alike in meaning. Wave and billow have each a distinct idea in common use, while the scientist adopts undulation. Much of elegance in style depends upon an apt choice of synonyms, e. g.: "She has a motherly look of tenderness;" "My maternal uncle was absent." Some associated words become stronger by a climax as we pass through Anglo Saxon, Latin, and Greek, e. g. mistake, fallacy, sophistry; lively, vivid, graphic; crazy, insane, idiotic. With such a legacy within easy reach the English language will not fail to furnish a term suited to our thoughts. Like other blessings, the use of synonyms may be perverted, as when Dr. Johnson recast this pithy sentence—"The rehearsal has not wit enough to keep it sweet," to the stilted form "The rehearsal has not vitality enough to preserve it from putrefaction."

A good command of language, rather a command of good language is a priceless treasure. Note this forcible succession, "There sat the wise, the eloquent, the patriotic Otham."
 That language affords a mental discipline is no fancied argument, nor is this of the same kind or in the same manner with other studies. There is one use of gold, another of copper, another of lead; and each is malleable. In like manner, there is one discipline in mathematics, another in pure science and another in language, the first chiefly contributing to the reasoning faculties, the second to memory and the third to expression. Some indirect helps will briefly be considered. Some phrases from the Latin spice our common reading, and the mere English student but half understands the meanings of via, ex-officio, sine die, equi distant, &c. This calls up the need of classic knowledge in the professions, strictly so called; while the merchant should have commercial and local law independent of attorney, and heads of families should not need to summon physicians when an understanding of the names of some disease would locate them and suggest relief. In short, in these days of wide-spread knowledge, every man must be his own scholar or consent to receive second-hand and pay tribute to the zealous seekers. If one reads understandingly the daily paper, filled with narrative and invention, he finds that science, art, navigation and war, as well as agriculture and miscellanies have each a set of terms based upon the ancient languages. Indeed the very names of the pursuits (taken at random) are in four instances from the Latin, and one from the Greek.
 Again the Latin is of historic value, revealing by the nature of its words the character and pursuits of the ancient Romans; as the frequency of certain terms shows us his mind's bent while a limited vocabulary means limited ideas.
 The English, while it imitates the excellencies of kindred languages, has also a few characteristics wholly its own. It exists, a vital organism and not a lifeless instrument. There is trace enough of the classic to give it the perfume of antiquity; while in its lack of inflections it has laid aside many dead weights.
 And thus while there are 55 millions to-day using the German tongue, about the same number Spanish and a less number French, there are 90 millions on the globe speaking the English tongue which seems destined to become universal. In real essence the English speaking governments rule one-fourth of the earth's population while more than one half of the world's epistles being in this tongue, assert the superior intelligence of the English mind and its diffusive influence.

The resolution as adopted empowers the committee to send for persons and papers.

Senator Eaton, chairman of the committee on foreign relations will on the 25th call up the Chinese treaties in his committee and endeavor to have them made the exclusive order of business from day to day, until the committee reaches final action in regard to them. He also says that with a view of hastening action he will propose that the committee obtain authority from the senate to hold meetings while the senate is in session. Senator Eaton fully appreciates the importance of taking prompt action on the treaties, as, if they are to be amended, they should speedily be brought before the senate for discussion or else they may not be returned to China for ratification of amendments before next winter; and if they are to be ratified without amendment, this also must be done quickly or there will be no time left for this congress to enact the necessary legislation to carry them into effect. On the whole, however, Senator Eaton doubts whether final action by the senate may reasonably be expected short of two weeks from the present time.

ENTIRELY UNSECRETARIAN.—A gentleman says that in his town a number of little girls hearing a good deal about the great fair to be held in Boston for abused children, and wishing to raise some money for it, planned a small fair of their own. One of them, who stands about even with her seventh birthday, came to ask him for a donation, and pressed her claims with the assurance, "This fair is entirely unsecretarian."

A House Made of Paper.

One of the most interesting objects offered to public inspection at the Sydney International Exhibition was a dwelling house exclusively made of paper, and furnished throughout with articles manufactured with the same material. The walls, roof, floorings and staircases alike consisted of carton-pierre; the carpets and curtains, bedsteads, lamps, sheets and counterpanes, towels, bootjacks, bath, kitchen utensils, etc., were one and all preparations of papier-mache, as were the very stoves used for heating the rooms, in which large fires were kept burning daily throughout the duration of the Exhibition. Several banquets were given in the paper house by its owners to the Commissioners, members of the Press, and foreigners of distinction. All the plates and dishes, knives and forks, bottles and drinking vessels used at these entertainments were fabricated entirely and solely of paper. Should these paper buildings come into vogue they may be expected to superinduce some striking changes in the rates of fire insurance, at present calculated upon a basis of bricks and mortar.

A Nice Point in Grammar.

The two young heirs, who had been taking their first lessons in grammar, disputed long and earnestly over the question, and at last agreed to decide it by arbitration, selecting the head of the family as arbiter, with full power to send for persons and papers. The old man was greasing his boots before the kitchen stove.

"Father," said the elder heir, "is it proper to say 'We is rich,' or 'We am rich?'"

The old man worked carefully down into the hollow of his boot under the instep, remaining a long time in thoughtful meditation, and then slowly replied: "Well, I should think it would come nigher to the truth to say we hain't rich."

The young heirs, when they came to think what a hard time they had worrying pennies out of their paternal relative, thought it might be made that way too. And the old man kept on annoying his boots with the extract of hog.—[Rockland Courier.]

"My case is just here," said a citizen to a lawyer: "The plaintiff will swear that I hit him. I will swear that I did not. Now what can you lawyers make of that if we go to trial?" "Five dollars apiece" was the prompt reply.

It is estimated that the sea swallows up about two and one-quarter yards a year of part of the Yorkshire coast, and about three feet a year of part of Kent.

British Peers in New York.

Perhaps, after all, it is hardly fair to contemn and deride the good-natured credulity which make the existence of sham "noblemen" like Mr. Polham Clinton so easy and so profitable. It was not so very long ago that a gallant officer of the household brigade, one of the best-born men in England, had, under stress of the queen's personal displeasure, to take an abrupt leave of his friends, and spend some years of exile on Staten Island. Nor will his riotous escapades, his downright ruffianism and brutality be easily forgotten by his simple neighbors. In her good time it pleased her most gracious majesty to pardon his original offense against public decency and the morale of the household brigade, and, to the delight of Staten Island and Bay Ridge, he went back to the horse guards.

Then there was another hereditary legislator of the British Empire who fled from one set of creditors in England only to create another in America.

His memory still lingers in many a

New York tradesman's profit and loss account, if not in more tender and romantic volumes. His inseparable companions were a bear and a valet, and how he managed to support either during his period of transportation beyond the high seas was a problem which everybody but himself gave up. His favorite residence was the cottage of an estimable old gentleman of New London, upon whom he preyed with an effrontery that was almost delicious. He had two equal characteristics—his ignorance and his contempt for the country which he harbored his fugitive impecuniosity. He just abominated Americans, and once took the Hudson River day-boat, with the hope of arriving in New Orleans, via Albany, the next night.

When his noble father died, his relatives compromised with his creditors, and at the present moment the wandering and penniless viscount is a rich and respectable earl.

Then, again, there was another British peer who attracted a good deal of attention to himself in New York and elsewhere two or three years ago, a peer of a severely mechanical turn, who dressed like a navvy, wore the cap of the coster-monger, and spent most of his time in foundries and machine shops. It is true that extenuation was found for these eccentricities in the fact that he had been a civil engineer or something of similar degree before the earldom dropped into his lap like an unexpected cherry.

But even upon that indulgent hypothesis

it was not easy to explain his lordship's too evident passion for strong drink and rioting in the streets, as in Chicago, where,

so runs the legend, under the pseudonym of John Smith, his lordship was amere-

d in the sum of $10 for his misplaced hilarity.—[N. Y. Hour.]

A Dying Man's Vision.

John Pope, pupil of Couture, associate of the New York National Academy, one of the founders of the Artists' Fund

Society, and an enthusiast in his profession, died at his home in Fourth avenue on Wednesday night, believing that at last, after forty years of labor, he had found the secret of perfected art. A man more thoroughly enraptured with his calling never lived. He painted while daylight lasted, and then spent the evening in producing the crayon drawings so much admired in the exhibitions at the Academy of Design. Though as a portrait painter he excelled, the dream of his life was to produce strong figure pictures, in which the background of landscape would form as effective a part as the figures themselves. This was his ruling passion in life, and as he neared

the end the passion grew stronger.

On Wednesday evening, as he lay back on his pillows, very weak and ill with hemorrhage of the lungs, his wife, who with their two children was watching at his side, was started by his suddenly rising in bed and crying feverishly:

"Quick! give me my palette and brush. I must paint. Don't attempt to stop me now, for at last I see it all. I can do it now, for I have just discovered the art through the influence of visions of exquisitely graduated music. It is plain as day at last."

His wife, alarmed at his excitement, made a weak attempt to dissuade him,

but as opposition only increased his excitement, and it was evident that his end was very near, she humored him. His paints, brushes and canvas were brought to him, and his tearful relatives arranged the coverings of the bed so that they would look more like the drapery of his studio. He began his work with a haste

RUTH PRIM'S BUDGET.

Eben returned from his visit to Miss Barberty's with glittering eyes and flushed face.

"What is it, Cousin Eben?" asked Mary.

"O, Aunt Betsy was more glad to see me than you can think. When I rapped at her door she opened it herself. She stared at me a little minute, then she caught hold of my hand and pulled me into the house. But look here, and see what she gave me before I can tell you about her. And the excited boy filled Mary's work-basket with pennies and silver coin from his two pockets, then she added, 'All these she gave me, and you ought to have seen the big bones she gave Ponto, and there was lots of meat on them, too. Speak, Ponto, and tell what else she gave you. He says, 'bread and butter.' Well, you can never think how glad she was to see me. She said she had been saving her pennies for me ever since she left our house, and so long as she lived she would never spend another one, but keep them all for me. She made me eat pie and cake until I felt sick. Grandpa, you always said she had no heart; but she never showed much of it when she lived here. Cousin Mary, she inquired for you, and said she would like to have you call and see her."

"Why don't she call on me?"
"I invited her to call, and it made her look awful cross. I began to think of my head. Most of the bumps I have on it Miss Barberty made."

"I think she made some very good ones."
"They didn't feel very good at the time, though. But after a little while her cross look softened down, and she said 'Ebe,'—I was frightened again, for she always called me Ebe when a storm was coming—but now she only said, 'Ebe,' you remember old times. The tiger isn't dead yet. I had better not come over to your house. Mary may come here. I remember her ma, and would like to see the child." So cousin Mary, you must call on her. She says she don't feel well, and shan't live long."

Three days later, Mary called on Miss Barberty. She rapped at the old-fashioned door. It was opened by a poor lame child, who supported himself with a crutch. He said:

"Walk in, Miss Barberty will be here soon."
Mary had scarcely entered before the lady of the house stood before her. Tall and erect and still she stood, her dark eyes flashing wildly. Mary, seeing this, knew she had come in a stormy hour, but she rose and timidly said,

"Miss Barberty?"
No nod of acknowledgment was given, and she added,

"Mary Pearl."
Miss Barberty moved slightly backward, muttering between her teeth,
"Pearl, Pearl; 'tis a fine thing to have a pearly name; 'tis a fine thing to have a pretty face; I had one once; now checking herself, as if better feelings were struggling into life, she said, 'you are welcome.'"

Mary offered her a bouquet of flowers she had gathered from their garden. (She had been told her Aunt Betsy was fond of flowers.) But she turned her back, saying, "Keep them; they harmonize with your name, face, and life."

Now she took up her bonnet that lay on the table, and said:
"I must go to market; then, turning to the lame boy, she added:
"Johnny, stay here till I get back."
The door closed after the unhappy woman, and Mary Pearl sat in mute astonishment, cogitating in her mind what she had better do under the present unfavorable circumstances. "Shall I go home," she said, "and wait for calmer waters, or shall I tarry here until she returns?"

She placed her flowers in a pitcher of water that stood on the mantel-piece, then commenced conversation with the lame boy.

She asked, "Do you live with Miss Barberty?"

"I live with my mother, Mrs. Underhill. She lives in a part of Miss Barberty's farm. My father takes care of Miss Barberty's farm, and I stay in here with her a good deal of the time."

"Do you like to stay in here?"
"Of course I do."
"I should think it would be rather lonely."

"Of course 'tis; but then it's lonely everywhere for me. You see, I'm not like other boys—I was born shabby—I can't grow like other boys—I am sixteen years old."

"You are very small; is it possible you are sixteen years old?"
"Of course, I am. I was born into this miserable shape sixteen years ago, with one foot twisted backward, as you see."

"And what is the matter with your back?"
"Pain has drawn it out of shape, of course. I never knew the hour I was free from pain."

"And Miss Barberty sympathizes with you?"
"Of course, she does; she is the best friend I have in the world—I will not except my father, mother or sister. I am an only son. My father looks upon me sometimes and sighs. I am of no use to him. He can feel no pride in me. I guess he pities me. Mother loves me, of course, I am a part of herself, and she can't help loving me, the poor, suffering child that slept in her bosom. Sister don't care for me at all. She wishes she had a smart brother. Miss Barberty is the only real friend I have. I love her; of course, I like to stay in here."

"I would like to be your friend and have you love me."

Poor Johnny smiled and said, "Of course."

"Why do you say, of course?" Johnny smiled again, drew himself up into a small heap on the sofa, looked out of the window, and then replied, "Of course every pretty girl wants to be loved."

"And wouldn't you like to be loved?"
"You have no right to put such a question to a poor miserable shape like me. But Miss Barberty loves me—'tis a wonder. There is nothing on this earth too good for her to bring me—when I am sick, she bathes my head, and tells me strange stories. I see the good woman coming home now."

Miss Barberty came in, seated herself on the sofa beside the lame boy, and slipped a parcel into his hand, then she turned to Mary, saying, "This boy and I feel blessed sympathies—we are both malformed."

"Not you, Miss Barberty," answered Mary.

"Yes, me; according to your grandpa's teaching, I am malformed. He says, 'tis the mind makes the man—and my mind is more malformed than Johnny's body. I try to comfort this poor child with some ideas I got when I was servant at Deacon David's—the old man used to read a deal in his Bible to Eber, and he talked a deal to him too. He did not talk his piety to me, for I wouldn't let him; but somehow his words stuck to me, and now I give them to Johnny. I tell him to cheer up—the old body is nothing—he will throw it off in a few days."

Lame Johnny smiled sadly as he said, "I wouldn't mind the old body if it did not ache so hard."

"Dear child," said Miss Barberty—and she brought a pillow and fixed it carefully under his head, telling him his back ached from sitting too long—then she turned to Mary and said: "I suppose you read the Bible?"

"Yes, I read it daily."
"And do you believe it is true?"
"I not only believe it true, but I know its true."

Miss Barberty drew her chair near, and looking Mary earnestly in the face, asked of him: "How do you know it is true?"

Mary blushed and hesitated a moment and then said:

"I feel it to be true; and do you not think the heart wiser than the head? In other words, do you not believe what we feel deeply, is more convincing, more satisfactory, than what we only think?"
"A thousand times more so. I have felt too much in my life, and sometimes I have not felt right—what do you do then?"

"I go to my Bible, and there I always get help."

"You do? Well, I never believed in that book. My father and mother professed to believe in it, but they didn't read it often. I know they didn't think it of much account, anyway; they always kept it laid up on the top shelf in the secretary. They were very careful on't; they wouldn't let it get hurt for anything, and I have always taken good care of the book. Lately I have taken to reading it. Isn't it a wonderful book, Miss Pearl?"

"Very wonderful. I have always read it, ever since I could read at all. It was my mother's great comfort in all her trouble. What, Miss Barberty, has led you to feel an interest in the book?"

"Oh, I haven't much interest in it, but I am reading it some, and I am reading it because I am so tired and weary of life. To tell the truth, I ain't well; I won't live long."

"Why don't you call in a doctor, and take some medicine?"

"I don't want any of their medicine. I wouldn't let one of 'em hurry me out of the world, and I won't let one on 'em keep me here. I am dreadful tired of living. I can't sleep nights. My heart keeps jumping about, and starts me if I happen to fall to sleep for a little minute, but it beats all the time in a hurry, and it makes me in a hurry. Do you know anything in the Bible that speaks directly to such a poor sinner as I am?"

"I know a great many promises and invitations that are spoken expressly to you."

"Tell me one, Mary—I forgot myself, and am calling you Mary—excuse me."
"I like to have you call me by that name. It reminds me of home and my mother."

"Well, then, I'll call you 'Mary,' for there seems tenderness in the word, and you have kind 'o got near to me. I am a blighted being. All the joy of my life is buried in the mournful past. If I believed in the bible, I might get some comfort there. As I told you, I have took to reading it lately, and I find many likenesses of my poor lost self in it. There is the Prodigal Son, wandered off so far into a strange country that he had nothing to eat. I am the same. I have travelled into the wilderness of sin, and I am famishing there. What can I do, Mary?"

Do what the Prodigal Son did—rise and return to our Father. There is a great welcome waiting for you."

"Your words are full of music. I like to hear you talk; but then I haven't power to rise. I am lost in vast darkness."

"Without strength from our heavenly Father I cannot rise, and without light from Him I cannot see. We are none of us good of ourselves. 'Tis the poor in spirit that receive the best blessing. 'Tis the hungry that are fed; 'tis the weak that are made strong."

"But, Mary, you are not in the same condition as poor me. There is a mighty difference between us. You are an innocent lamb, gathered into the fold. You have strength, you have light. That the strength and light are given you matters nothing. You have accepted them, and they have become a part of your own happy self. You have a faith as bright as the bright noonday. I have only a glimmering hope, and half the time that is hidden by a black cloud. But as I have said, do you know any verse in the bible written for me.

"Yes; 'tis is for you. 'Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled.'"
"Well, I have thought a deal of that verse, for I am hungering and thirsting; but I ain't sure if it be after righteousness. I want rest."

"Then accept this invitation: 'Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.'"
"Those are precious words, and I tell 'em to Johnny; but I haven't power to rise and go. I can't accept 'em. Do you believe in a hell, Mary?"

"Not in a literal hell of fire and brimstone, but I believe any evil passion cherished in the heart and brought forth into life is in itself a hell."

"Well, that is the miserable hell I've been in for many years, and 'tisn't an easy thing to step out of it. Blood saturated with poison can't be purified in a day. Your grandpa used to cast seed by the wayside when I lived with him, but I think some of it took root in my mind, and is springing up now. He used to give his talk to Eber, more than once I went out of the house, his words made me shiver so. Eber is the smartest boy I ever knew, and one day, when he came home from the Sunday school, how his black eyes sparkled as he said: 'Grandpa, I have found a command in the Bible that is not practically true. It says, 'Take up thy bed and walk.' Now, you can't take yourself up, much less your bed.' Grandpa smiled one of his heavenly smiles as he said: 'You confounded me with my worn-out house, and 'tis not a literal bed we are to take up. The letter of the Bible killeth; 'tis the spirit that maketh alive, and 'tis my spiritual bed that I am to walk with. I am to take all the spiritual truths I know, and live them; I am to eat the Saviour's flesh and drink his blood.' Now I am beginning to believe a little in the spirit of the Bible. I've got to, for the words came straight home to me; but, then, I can't take up my bed and walk. I can't go one step forward. I am paralyzed. What shall I do?"

"Can you pray?" Aunt Betsy?"

"Not for myself. I can pray for him, Johnny, and my prayer for him has power. It brings him comfort, doesn't it, Johnny?"

"Of course it does, and all the comfort I have comes from you," and now he looked fondly at the little paper parcel he held in his hand, and then wiped the glistening tears from his eyes, repeating, "of course it does." Now, Miss Barberty gently re-arranged his pillows, bathed his weary head, then kneeling beside him, she took one of his small, thin hands in hers, and sang to him the "Sweet By and By." The lame boy smiled. 'Twas a smile of patience, and he said, "God bless you, Miss Barberty, and make you just like our Saviour. Of course, I needn't ask Him to do it, for He has done it already. You ain't like Parson Dim, Jr. His prayers tire me; they are made up of words; your prayers have tears in 'em." Now he smiled again faintly as he added, "And they are all made up of sugar candy."

Miss Barberty remained kneeling by his couch, her eyes fixed upon the suffering child. There was in the room a sublime silence; a loving heart prayer ascended the heavenly ladder, which ended with the tender inquiry:
"Are you comfortable, Johnny?"
"Of course I am, and I feel the 'Sweet By and By' very near."
Miss Barberty rose, saying,
"I am thankful to the kind Ruler of heaven and hell for giving me that helpless child to love. Since Thomas left me, my heart has been like a pent-up volcano; there was no outlet for its restless throbbing. But I'm getting tired; I ain't well, and can't bear much. Come again. Good-by."

Mary Pearl walked slowly home, thinking of this poor, suffering woman. She had been much interested in grandpa's story of her early life. It had shown her a phase of love that her own gentle nature would never conceive. But this personal interview with her had touched with tender pity her inmost heart. And she wended her way through the fields musing thus:
"Strange woman! She feels herself in the wilderness of sin, and begs for a morsel of bread from the Divine Word to satisfy her fainting spirit. How beautiful is her kindness to the poor lame boy! Surely the Lord is with her in her suffering, and she is using a pound of the ointment of spikenard, very costly, and she is anointing the feet of Jesus and wiping them with her hair, and I am sure the house is filled with the odor of the ointment. The Lord says, 'Who-soever does good unto one of the least of my children, does it unto Me.' Be comforted, Aunt Betsy."

The American midgets, Commodore Foot and Miss Jennie Quigley, were recently presented to the Prince and Princess of Wales at Marlborough House. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh were also present.

An American actor says that what English audiences demand is something to make them laugh. Then they ought to see a man trying to carve a sixteen-year-old turkey with a dull knife.

Perry Martin, of Arizona, climbed a tree to shake down a coon. Just how he felt when he found the coon to be a bear will never be known, as bruin cuffed him off the limb and he had a fall of fifty feet.

It is said that Mr. W. W. Coreoran, the Washington banker and philanthropist, has given away in all 88,000,000 in public benefactions, and $1,000,000 in private charities, and that this was about three-quarters of his fortune.

PUGET SOUND ARGUS.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF JEFFERSON CO

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1881.

THAT JACK KNIFE.

The editor of the N. Y. "Tribune" during the late political campaign, offered a jack knife to the newspaper that could tell the most outrageous campaign lie and barefaced political falsehood.

The editor of the "Oregonian" holds up Mr. Mitchell as a creature of corporations and monopolies, and attempts at the same time to make himself the special champion of a corporation, viz: the Northern Pacific R. R.

Men who permit their prejudices and personal feelings to triumph over principles; who, to obtain sweet personal revenge, would trample party success and party principles under foot, are unworthy any position of trust or influence.

The South American war is undoubtedly drawing to a close—judging from the news of the capture of Callao and Lima both by the victorious Chileans.

OUR readers will please excuse typographical errors this week. We had to hurry to issue on time.

We are gratified to notice that the agent of the McPherson colony has visited the northern portion of Whatcom county, and that he has found it to be substantially as represented by the editor hereof in writing up a description of it last Spring for the the Immigration pamphlets published here.

It has been stated by all the Sound papers, we believe, that Capt. L. M. Starr is suffering from cancer of the stomach, at Paso Robles Springs in California.

THE Kamloops outlaws were hung at New Westminster on the 31st ult. They consisted of the McLean brothers and Alex. Hare.

RELIEF BILL FOR CAPT. GEORGE D. HILL, U. S. THE Rev. John Reid, of Victoria, B. C. who has recently, in San Francisco, and formerly in England, been specially engaged with Messrs. Moody and Sankey, will, D. V., deliver lectures on "God's work, by means of these celebrated Evangelists, and the advantages to be expected from their movement."

PUGET SOUND ARGUS.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF PORT TOWNSEND.

BRIEF LOCAL ITEMS.

SAFELY moved. That's what makes us happy.

THE Presbyterian parsonage is nearly ready for occupancy.

COME and see us North side of Water street, opposite Central Hotel.

PROF. Vertilli was greatly disappointed last week, as well as the fun loving public of this place. The storm Friday and Saturday prevented the contemplated entertainment.

By the progress being made in altering and re-building the old Fowler corner house we should judge that it will be second to none in town in general appearance, when finished. The main store room is to be hard finished throughout.

THE Dispatch arrived yesterday at noon, from Neah Bay and way ports. She brought a number of passengers, among whom were Judge Swan, U. S. Inspector, of Neah Bay, Capt. Stratton, of the Angeles light house, and Mr. Wm. Payne and family, of Dungeness.

THE P. S. Iron Company now turning out ore quite rapidly at the head of Port Townsend Bay, have shipped several tons of their manufactured iron to the Seattle and Tacoma foundries. This will afford practical tests that will show the quality of the iron.

THE schooner Jennie, owned by Capt. Dalgarno, has been fitted up and gone to sea under command of our young friend, "Jimmy" Dalgarno. The latter though a young person to be placed in so important a position, already paces the quarter deck with a visage as grim as the veriest old salt on the seas. He will henceforth be known as Capt. Jas. Dalgarno, Jr.

LAST week the schooner Seventy-Six dragged her anchor in Neah Bay, during a heavy gale, and went ashore in front of the life saving station. Prompt assistance was rendered by Capt. Willoughby, who had just returned home, and the vessel was put in such a fix that the Goliath towed her off. Her little mishap and that of the Champion, may afford the editor of the "Oregonian" a text for a dissertation upon the "dangers of the entrance to Puget Sound."

At a regular meeting of Lafayette Lodge of Perfection No. 3, A. & A. S. Rite, at the Orient of Port Townsend, held on Wednesday, February 2d, 1881, the following officers were elected: D. C. H. Rothschild, Master; Thomas T. Minor, Sen. W.; H. L. Tibbals, Jun. W.; N. D. Hill, Sec.; H. E. Morgan, Treas.; Robt. C. Hill, Orator; C. C. Bartlett, Almoner; A. H. Tucker, Master of Ceremonies; Ben. Frank. Bowers, Expert; C. E. Anderson, Asst. Expert; J. J. Hunt, Captain of Host.

THE U. S. Revenue steamer Wolcott did good service to our merchant marine last week by towing the schooner Reporter off of Point Wilson where the latter had grounded by dragging her anchor. It seems to us as though the Wolcott would be more readily available in case of marine disasters if she were in port here oftener. This port is her headquarters, where she ought to be when not cruising, and when a vessel gets in distress this is the place the owners come or send word to in order to get the cutter. If she happens to be at some up Sound port, where she frequently is, there is delay in getting word to her, and, as nearly all of the disasters to Puget Sound shipping occur between here and Cape Flattery, there is still greater delay in getting to the scene of disasters. We do not have the ordering of these things, and our verdant suggestions may seem presumptive, but to the proverbial "man up a tree" it really looks as indicated.

LAST week we had a brief item about the Pilot schooner Champion getting ashore at Neah Bay. Since then we have learned the following particulars: The schooner had been anchored near the shore of Wadadah Island, and, in attempting to get under way, the jib filled on the wrong tack and the vessel drifted ashore. The wind was blowing on shore, and afterwards increased to a gale. This, and the extreme high tide, carried her high up on the beach. H. M. S. Gunboat Rocket, of Esquimalt, happened along, and Capt. McAlmond sought her assistance. Captain Olivar of the Rocket kindly proceeded to the assistance of the stranded vessel and finally removed her from her perilous position, although he had to remain from Saturday evening till Monday morning to do so. The officers of the Rocket are spoken of in terms of highest praise for their meritorious service in this case. We understand that the injuries to the Champion are not serious.

"ARE you moving?" This question has been asked us about three hundred times during the past few days (we kept count till it reached near that number and then quit disgruntled). It is so refreshing to set your load down two or three dozen times in going a block, for the purpose or responding to interrogations of the above tenor and drift, and to impart such necessary information to an anxious public! They wouldn't have known that we were moving without being told so in the most positive and explicit terms, each one separately and individually, for himself and no other. Next time we expect to effect a saving of time and breath by posting appropriate notices on all the bulletin boards in town.

Last Saturday and Sunday Port Townsend people were treated to a nice lot of new snow just from the factory. It "mantled the patient earth" to the depth of about a foot, and then the weather turned off clear and cold for a couple of days. During the brief sleighing spell every horse and sleigh in town did active duty in the interest of pleasure seekers. On Monday night, however, the wind shifted to a southerly quarter, and a rapid thaw set in. In 24 hours' time sleighing, skating and coasting were effectually spoiled, and by Wednesday the "beautiful" had completely vanished. At present writing it is almost warm enough to sprout onions. So we record Washington Territory weather.

OUR readers who fail to scan the advertisement of Mr. Hernandez, shoemaker, which we insert this week, may miss knowing where they can get cheap work on their "foot-gear" done. Remember the place: Water Street, between Bartlett's store and Smith & Terry's butcher shop. He'll "rig you out to kill," and please keep it in your memory.

MR. James Morgan, engineer of the little steamer Virginia, has purchased the interest owned in that vessel by Mr. J. J. Hunt, of this place. The Virginia continues on her present routes.

THE schooner Mist is nearly ready to launch again. She will start to sea about next Monday, under command of Capt. Ed. Hickman. Thus the sailing fleet increases.

THROUGH the efforts of Col. and Mrs. Briggs, aided by many other kind friends, the temporary Presbyterian manse is so nearly completed that the promising young pastor, Rev. John Seid, and his excellent lady, will be able to enter into possession early next week.

RECENTLY the steamer Dispatch carried over to San Juan a very fine bell, weighing, with mountings, 550 lbs., from the celebrated Blymer manufactory of Cincinnati, Ohio. The bell is for the Presbyterian mission. It is a fine simile of the one at Semiahmoo church, the rich tones of which can be heard a distance of from four to five miles. As this acquisition to our beautiful little church, our friends on San Juan may well be proud. We wish the pastor, Rev. T. J. Weekes, a long and successful stay with his parishioners, and that his labors may be crowned with rich reward. To his untiring energy, working under many disadvantages, the church has been brought near to completion. Through the courtesy of Capt. T. J. Conner, of the brig Deacon, the bell was brought from San Francisco to the Sound free of charge. It was also taken from Port Townsend to its destination free by the kindness of Capt. Fred Munroe, of the Dispatch.

Notice.

I have 5 pure white faced Black Spanish Cocks and 4 Brown Leghorn Cocks for sale cheap if called for soon. Will spare a few trils of each. Also eggs for hatching, from each variety, in the Spring. B. S. HOXSIE. Port Townsend. 42:1f.

Edison's Electric Light. Has thus far proved a failure as a practical light for family use, and the owners of gas stocks breathe more freely and see renewed dividends near at hand, but the Oregon Kidney tea has been a success from the first, paying large dividends of restored health to all those afflicted with backache or any disease of the kidneys or urinary organs, and carrying consternation to the pockets of rival concerns with worthless nostrums to sell. Ask for the Oregon Kidney Tea and take nothing else.

MR. Korter has made a nice improvement in his barber shop. We venture to say that he has a soap as nearly fitted up as any on the Sound. He has also fitted up a bath room for salt and sulphur baths. He has done his best to have one of the finest shops, and is master of his profession.

Mad Spotted Tail.

A correspondent writes of the grand council of the Yanktonais Sioux as follows: Led by White Ghost and Running Bear, the chiefs, one after another, gave Spotted Tail to understand that he was an interloper and a meddler, and that they wanted nothing to do with him in the consummation of the contract under consideration. They told him the land on the opposite side of the river was as much theirs as it was his and Red Cloud's—that they did not use it and seldom went upon it, except to make visits, but it was theirs all the same, and they proposed to have their share of the pay for a railroad right of way across it. Spotted Tail was told that the government had given the Sioux nation much money, and that he got the most of it. He had moved his Indians from place to place, each time on a speculation, and he had sold the Black Hills, the property of the Sioux and the former sacred abode of the Great Spirit, and that they had received no benefit from these successive transactions. Finally, as a clincher, the venerable Running Bear said: "You have plenty of money; you do not work. Where do you get it?" The inference was that Spot was a thief, and it made his royal highness mad. He advanced to the center of the dusky throng, threw his blanket upon the floor and stood with naked shoulders before them, in an attitude which every Indian understands to be one of defiance. Then he opened with one of his eloquent harangues, and for a time the Creek hills trembled by their foundation. He told the Yanktonais if they opposed the construction of the Milwaukee road through the reservation (which they have no intention of doing, and Spot knows it) that he would visit upon them the direst vengeance. He said to them: "Myself and Red Cloud have forty-five hundred braves at our camp. They are better armed and mounted than ever Indians were before. They are soldiers and always will be soldiers, and will never work for a living. I will bring them down upon you, and we will see if you will do as I tell you to."

As his passionate words flowed forth, the Yanktonais chiefs one by one silently rose from their places and glided out of the room until there was no one left but Spotted Tail and the agent, who was taking notes of remarks on both sides. This action on the part of his audience is the Indian way of evincing contempt for a speaker. Spotted Tail continued for a moment after the room was deserted and then halted in his remarks. Then turning to the agent he said: "Write down this silence; there is more to it than anything they have said." So saying he gathered his kingly robes about him and stalked forth into the open air, where he thundered his defiance to the few loitering Indians, and left the agency.

This incident is significant. It shows that the river bands are determined to cast off the authority of Spotted Tail and set up business in their own way. In the ranks of his own immediate followers, the Upper Brules, there is much dissatisfaction over his mercenary ways, and a grand revolt against his chieftainship is imminent.—[Yankton (D. T.) Press.]

Honesty the Best Policy.

Slim Nick, says the Arkansas Gazette, was arraigned before a Justice of the Peace on the charge of stealing a calf. "Are you guilty?" asked the Judge. "Course I isn't. I's ez innocent ez de dribben snow."

Several witnesses were examined, and the evidence was so conclusive that the Judge exclaimed: "That will do. The prisoner is as guilty as Judas." "Judge, I doesn't like dat 'spression. I doesn't mind bein' called guilty, but doan' say dat I'se guilty as Judas Scarrut, case I'se allers been a church member. Dat word Judas grinds on my stomach, boss, or judge, if yer please. I allers steers clear of dat word. But now if yer want me for splain dis situation, I ken do hit. May I splain?"

"Go ahead." "Some time ago Mr. Jackson, de man what cuses me wrongfully, borrowed a bridle from me. Tuther day I axed him for hit, an' when I eum 'long home dat ebenin' I seed a bridle hangin' on de fence. I tack hold of de bridle reins, flung dem ober my shoulder and started off. I thought dot sumthin' pulled a little hard at first, an' I thought dot de bridle had coteh on a nail, but being so strong I didn't take much notice ob hit. When I got home and went in de house, my wife axed, 'Nick, what yer doin' wid dot calf?' I looked roun' 'an' dar shooh nuff was a calf hangin' on ter de end of de bridle. Dar wuz a piece ob paw-paw bark tied on to de head stall, an' de calf had swallowed hit. Calves is monstrous fond of paw-paw bark."

"Why was the calf found ent up?" asked the Judge. "Dat's what I'se gwine ter tell yer. De thing suffered so, dat ter git hit outen hits misery, I killed hit, tendin' mixed mornin' ter carry de quarters an' hide ter de owner. I didn't wanter be 'rested fur cruelty ter animals. Is all de facts plain, Judge?"

"You can go." "Thank yer, Judge. Go home, did yer say?" "No, to jail."

Dr. Erasmus D. Hudson, a celebrated physician, and best known for his skill in the treatment of gun-shot wounds, died Friday, at Riverside, Connecticut. He was an active temperance man, and took a prominent part in the anti-slavery agitation forty years ago, lecturing and writing ably in behalf of abolition.

French Fun.

A novel but not inaccurate definition of Justice—The natural daughter of Vengeance legitimized by law.

A sick peasant motions feebly to his wife to approach his bedside, and whispers painfully, "I think, my dear, that I could fancy a little broth."

"My dear, what do you want of broth? Hasn't the doctor just given you up?" A nice little gummy, pomaded, perfumed, gloved, wearing a deadlight in his eye, is promenading along the street and happens to jostle another pedestrian, who turns upon him ferociously and cries:

"Ha, a blow! Villain, you shall answer for this!" "I beg your pardon, I am sure," replies the gummy; "I didn't see you, sir, 'pon my honor; the fact is, I had my glass in my eye."

Son to his fond father, who has asked him where he is in his class now—"Oh, pa, I've got a much better place than I had last quarter."

"Indeed! Well, where are you?" "I'm fourteenth."

"Fourteenth, you little lazybones! You were eight last term. Do you call that a better place?" "Yes, sir; it's nearer the stove."

Two strangers enter a cafe in a remote quarter and seat themselves at one of the tables. Waiter—What will you have, gentlemen? Stranger, desiring to produce an effect—Have you any Apollyon water? Fresh from the spring, mind!

Waiter—I don't know, sir; I'll go and inquire. (He goes.) Stranger, to companion—Precious queer sort of a hole this is—precious queer sort of a hole it must be, begad, when a gentleman can't get a bottle of Apollyon water. Not the sort of a place I'm used to. (The habitues are stricken with shame.)

Waiter, returning—Yes, sir; we have lots of it. Fresh from the spring this morning, sir. Stranger—Aw!—well—brings us two beers! (The habitues regain their self-esteem.)

Two hacks arrive simultaneously at the entrance of a narrow lane. First Charioteer (inquiringly)—You taken by the hour? Second Charioteer (slowly)—No; by the trip.

First Charioteer (drawing up)—All right, go ahead, I'm engaged by the hour. In the good days of Louis XIV. the grand daughter of Rose, one of the King's secretaries, was married to a M. de Portail, to whom she brought a comparatively small money dower of 50,000 crowns, though she was heiress to a large fortune. She had expected a husband of better birth and more agreeable qualities, and was not only disappointed but took no pains to conceal her disappointment. Her husband and father-in-law went to complain to Rose, who said he would see about the matter, but didn't. The young bride persevering in her contumacious conduct, her grandfather was again appealed to and promised to give her a lecture, but he didn't. Finally M. de Portail and his pa appeared for a third time with the same complaint.

"What!" cried the old gentleman in well-simulated fury, "does she show no signs of amendment? Confound the wench! Go home to her and tell her from me that if ever I hear any more complaints about her unwifely conduct I'll disinherit her."

They went. He never heard any more complaints. D., an abominable parvenu, has been presented at a fashionable mansion, has dined there and departing has not been heard from again for a full month.

His hostess, who cordially detests people of his sort, has solemnly vowed to be revenged. One evening the servant announced him.

"How are you?" he says languidly; "you see, I was passing by the house and seeing the windows all lighted up I thought I'd run up stairs for a moment. We'll let this count for a visit."

"We will let this count for several visits," says his hostess, icily, moving away.

Without Pain.

Before the days of chloroform there was a quack in San Francisco who advertised tooth-drawing without pain. The patient was placed in a chair, and the instrument applied to his tooth with a wrench, followed by a roar from the unpleasantly surprised sufferer.

"Stop," cried the dentist. "Compose yourself. I told you I would give you no pain; I only just gave you the twinge as a specimen, to show you Cartwright's method of operating."

Again the instrument was applied—another tug, another roar. "Now, don't be impatient; that is Dumerge's way; be seated and be calm; you will now be sensible of the superiority of the method."

Another application—another tug, another roar. "Pray be quiet; this is Parkinson's mode, and you don't like it; no wonder."

By this time the tooth hung by a thread, and whipping it out the operator exultingly exclaimed: "This is my mode of tooth-drawing without pain, and you are now enabled to compare it with the operations of Cartwright, Dumerge, and Parkinson."

Gordon's Advice to the Chinese.

Colonel Gordon's advice to the Chinese is briefly to this effect: "You have a military organization and discipline which is suited to your people do not alter it. Arm them in large numbers with breech-loaders which will carry 1000 yards. Better these than a superior class carrying 1500 and do not manufacture them yourselves. You can buy them abroad cheaper and better; and they should be on one system applicable to the whole. Then numbers, which China has the advantage over all other nations, will tell. Chinese power is in her numbers, in the quick movement of her troops, the little baggage they require, and their few wants."

Hence he concludes, "China should never engage in pitched battles; her strength is in her quick movements, in cutting off the trains of baggage and the continuous worrying of her enemies, and in night attacks not pushed home. Rockets, not cannon, in such service, to be moved with the troops. China should not attack forts; she ought to wait and starve her foes out and worry them day and night."

These directions, it will be seen, all have reference to defensive operations on land if invaded, and in the calculation that rapid marching, surprising convoys and cutting off supplies, with the aid of the heliograph, would enable them to weary out their enemy and sicken his troops. As to the coast defense, he recommends that it should be protected by torpedoes, sown thickly—even at the risk of occasionally blowing up a junk or two—and so scattered that the enemy cannot learn where to look for them.

"Anxiety as to their whereabouts would make people ill and cross," he adds, "and they should be cheap, and fired by a fuse, and not so expensive and complicated ones, fired by electricity. China should buy no more big guns; they cost money and are a great deal of trouble to keep in order, and the enemy's ships have too thick sides to be pierced."

Again, "China should defend her seacoast by very heavy mortars; they cost little, are easy to use, can be fired from places the enemy cannot see, and he cannot get safe from a mortar-shot—it falls on the deck, and there it breaks everything. China can get 500 mortars for the same money she gets an 18-ton gun for, and if she loses them, the loss is little. No enemy could get into a port which is defended by 1500 large mortars and plenty of torpedoes. So, also, the Chinese fleet should consist, on the same principle, of small, quick vessels, with light draught and no great weight of armor. China's strength is in the creeks, not on the open sea. China needs no Europeans to help her to carry out this programme, and it is a cheap as well as a feasible one. If China cannot do this for herself, then no one else can do it for her. But as long as Peking is the seat of Government, China can never afford to go to war with any first-class Power—it is too near the sea. The Emperor (queen bee) must be in the center of the hive. Finally, and the sting as well as the moral of the whole is there, "No iron clads or iron gunboats can help China till she has a place to keep them in. But China can have no place (asylum) to keep them till she has an army, and China cannot have an army when Generals keep 2000 men and draw pay for 5000. These Generals ought to have their heads cut off."—Contemporary Review.

Moral Courage.

"Moral Courage" was printed in large letters and put as the caption of the following items, and placed in a conspicuous place on the door of a systematic merchant in New York, for constant reference, and furnished by him for publication:

Have the courage to discharge a debt while you have the ready money in your pocket.

Have the courage to do without that which you do not need, however much your eyes may covet it.

Have the courage to speak to a friend in a seedy coat, even though you are in the company of a rich one, and richly attired.

Have the courage to speak your mind when it is necessary that you should do so, and hold your tongue when it is prudent that you should do so.

Have the courage to own that you are poor, and thus disarm poverty of its sting.

Have the courage to tell a man why you refuse to credit him.

Have the courage to tell a man why you will not lend him your money.

Have the courage to cut the most agreeable acquaintance you have when you are convinced that he lacks principle—a friend should bear with a friend's infirmities, but not with his vices.

Have the courage to show respect for honesty, in whatever guise it appears, and your contempt for dishonesty and duplicity, by whomsoever exhibited.

Have the courage to wear your old clothes until you can pay for new ones.

Have the courage to prefer comfort and propriety to fashion in all things.

Have the courage to acknowledge your ignorance, rather than to seek for knowledge under false pretences.

Have the courage, in providing an entertainment for your friends, not to exceed your means.

Have the courage to insure the property in your possession, and thereby pay your debts in full.

The drink known as "gin-sling" was invented by John Collins, a waiter at Limer's Hotel, Conduit street, London. John was corrupted into gin, and Collins into clins, and thence into slings.

What Women Want to Know.

The Butte (M. T.) Miner says it is not generally known, but it is nevertheless a fact, that on lower Willow creek, not many miles from Butte, resides a woman different from all others of her sex. She is probably the only woman known to ancient or modern times who, possessing the natural feminine ability to talk studiously, abstains, with a perseverance truly admirable, from expressing herself on any subject. For fifteen years, except on one occasion, she has not uttered a word even to her nearest relations. Her organs of articulation are perfect, and the friends of the strange lady entertain not the slightest doubt of her speaking capabilities were she disposed to exercise them.

It is the impression of those best acquainted with the history of this phenomenal woman, that her absolute refusal to speak results from a disappointment in love while she was yet in her teens. Fifteen years ago, in the classic State of Missouri, Miss M—, then a beautiful and accomplished girl of sixteen summers, became the object of a young neighbor's affection, which she reciprocated with the full strength of her impressive soul. He told his love and they became secretly engaged. But the news was too good and fraught with too much future happiness to keep, and it was accordingly communicated to the young girl's parents. Then for the first time in her budding womanhood a cloud arose to cast a shadow on her so far contented existence. The parents, for reasons which they doubtless considered good and sufficient, sternly and relentlessly withheld their consent for the proposed union of two loving hearts. More than this, they ordered the young gallant to cease his attentions, and their decision was irrevocable. Soon after this the family moved to Montana, and since the day of their starting the young lady, now grown to a woman of thirty years, but still comely in form and feature and apparently intelligent, has not articulated as much as half a dozen words. Her long silence is attributed to intense and abiding indignation at the supposed cruelty of her marriage, and probably conceiving words to be useless and inadequate to express the poignancy of her suffering, she concluded never to speak again, a resolution which she has adhered to so far with remarkable pertinacity. She lives with her parents on Willow Creek, as before stated, occupies a room by herself, refuses to see strangers, and to all intents and purposes is absolutely dumb. Her memory is strong and accurate for one who neither talks nor reads nor takes other intellectual exercise. Through the partition of her room she will sometimes listen to the conversation of those in an adjoining department, and occasionally, several days after it has taken place, it will be found on paper in her room written out verbatim. A severe mental exertion is necessary to accomplish this feat, and the fact that she is capable of such exertion is regarded as sufficient evidence of her entire sanity. It is reported that several ranchers on Willow Creek, convinced of her determination never to speak again, have made matrimonial advances, but have been spurned. On the whole the case is an interesting one, the more so as she is still young, beautiful and intelligent.

Why He Got a Receipt.

The following story is told of a crafty lawyer, subtle as a fox, who lived in Halifax:

An Indian of the Miami tribe, named Simon, owed him some money. The lawyer had waited long. His patience gave out, and he threatened the Indian with lawsuit, process and executions. The poor red man got scared and brought the money to his creditor. The Indian waited, expecting the lawyer to write a receipt.

"What are you waiting for?" asked the lawyer. "Receipt," said the Indian.

"A receipt?" said the lawyer, "a receipt—what do you know about a receipt? Can you understand the nature of a receipt? Tell me the use of one and I will give it to you."

The Indian looked at him a moment, and then replied: "S'pose maybe me die; me go to heben; me find the gate locked; me see the 'Postel' Peter; he say, 'Simon, what you want?' Me say, 'Want to get in.' He say, 'You pay Mr. J.—dat money?' What me do? Me hab no receipt. Hab to hunt all ober the other place to find you."

He got a receipt.

In this cold weather there are plenty of stamps on the floor of the Post Office.

ALASKA NEWS.

The U. S. Mail steamer California arrived at this port on the 24 inst., from Alaskan ports, enroute for San Francisco. The following items were sent from here to the Seattle "Post," by Prof. Roberts:

Mike Powers, Pryor and their companions, previously reported lost, were found by a relief party.

On the 15th of January an attempt was made to assassinate Lieut. Benson, commander of the Jamestown marine force. As he was passing near the custom house at night an unknown party spring on him from behind, endeavored to trip him and side then fired one shot at him, the ball passing through the lapel of his coat. Benson believe the party to have been an Indian.

By the discretion of Commander Glass three Russians and two white men have been arrested for distilling hoochencoo, and the contents of their distillery destroyed. The man came down the California in charge of Lieut. Haines, and immediately on their arrival Capt. Stodder of the revenue cutter Wolcott placed that vessel at the disposal of the lieutenant, who accepted it and started for Tacoma with his prisoners, from whence they will be taken to Portland for trial.

On the morning of the 25th Capt. Glass planned and perfected a most successful and effectual raid upon the Indian village. Over 200 stills and 1700 gallons of mash and liquor were destroyed besides other important seizures. The Indians offered no resistance and in many cases became informers on their friends. The merchants of Sitka adopted a resolution not to import any more more molasses or Sawdich Island sugar from which hoochencoo is manufactured.

There are 60,000 feet of lumber in Sitka awaiting shipment to the Takon mines. A steam launch has gone there to survey. Capt. Glats ensures protection to original locations against jumpers. Eight cabins are built and snow in the mines is deep. A road is being cut through to the quartz mines.

Recently two canoes containing thirty Indians swamped near Takon and all were drowned.

Indians assisted by some white men have been holding terrible debaucheries at Wrangle, and have been fighting among themselves and with the whites.

The people of Alaska, especially the ladies of the Missionary home at Wrangle are loud in their praise of Capt. Glass for his prompt action in destroying the hoochencoo.

Indians report the burning of Bella Coula including the Hudson Bay Co.'s station.

Decay of the Teeth Arises from various causes, but principally it may be attributed to early neglect or the indiscriminate use of tooth powders and pastes, which give a momentary whiteness to the teeth while they corrode the enamel. The timely use of that delicate aromatic tooth-wash, Fragrant SOZODONT, will speedily arrest the progress of decay, harden the gums, and impart a delightful fragrance to the breath. It removes those ravages which people sustain in their teeth from the use of sweet and acid articles.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE. Even the women are not all agreed in wanting the ballot, and it is an open question whether, if submitted to a vote of women alone, they would declare in favor of undertaking to discharge the grave duties and responsibilities of electors. But if the women of Oregon and Washington were called upon to vote for the best and most effectual remedy for lame backs and all diseases of the kidneys and urinary organs, the vote would be unanimous for the Oregon Kidney Tea, which is sold everywhere.

The beautiful harvest in both this country and Europe will no doubt cause wheat to rub very low this season, but this will not lessen the demand for the Oregon Kidney Tea, as every man or woman who has a backache or any trouble with the kidneys or urinary organs, will try this well known remedy even if wheat should be only 50c per bushel. Sold by all Druggists.

THE HIGH WATER OF 1880 Did not reach a point equal to that of 1871, but it was high enough to do a deal of damage. Time, however, will repair this, but time only makes worse every case of disease of the kidneys and urinary organs which a box of Oregon Kidney Tea would cure. Sold by all Druggists.
