When Contention, calm mind, turn me,
To the river I looked to care;
So to the river I looked to care,
To the river I looked to care.

Upon the bank where I found me,
I found a man who was looking for me,
I found a man who was looking for me,
I found a man who was looking for me.

When I saw a man who was looking for me,
I found a man who was looking for me,
I found a man who was looking for me,
I found a man who was looking for me.

And I saw a man who was looking for me,
I found a man who was looking for me,
I found a man who was looking for me,
I found a man who was looking for me.

And I saw a man who was looking for me,
I found a man who was looking for me,
I found a man who was looking for me,
I found a man who was looking for me.

And I saw a man who was looking for me,
I found a man who was looking for me,
I found a man who was looking for me,
I found a man who was looking for me.

The Little Outcast.

"Mayn't I stay, ma'm? I'll do anything you give me—cut wood, go after water, and do all your errands."

The troubled eyes of the speaker filled with tears. It was a lad that stood at the outer door, pleading with a kind-looking woman, who still seemed to doubt his good intentions.

The cottage sat by itself on a bleak moor, or what in Scotland would have been called such. The time was near the end of November, a fierce wind rattled the boughs of the only naked tree near the house, and fled with a shivering sound into the narrow doorway, as if seeking for warmth at the blazing fire within.

Now and then a snow-flake touched with its soft chill the cheek of the listener, or whitened the angry redness of the poor boy's benumbed hands.

The woman was evidently loth to grant the boy's request, and the peculiar look stamped upon his features would have suggested to any mind an idea of depravity far beyond his years.

But her mother's heart could not resist the sorrow in those large, but not handsome, gray eyes.

"Come in, at any rate, till the gude-man comes home; there, sit down by the fire; you look perishing with cold." And she drew a chair to the warmest corner, then suspiciously glancing at the child from the corners of her eyes, she continued setting the table for supper.

Presently came the tramp of heavy shoes, the door swung open with a quick jerk, and the "gude-man" presented himself, weary with labor.

A look of intelligence passed between his wife and himself—he, too, scanned the boy's face with an expression not evincing satisfaction, but nevertheless, made him come to the table, and sat by the zest with which he dispatched his supper.

Day after day passed, and yet the boy begged to be kept "only till to-morrow;" so the good couple, after due consideration, concluded that so long as he was docile and worked so heartily, they would retain him.

One day, in the middle of winter, a peddler, long accustomed to trade at the cottage, made his appearance, and disposed of his goods readily, as he had been waited for.

"You have a boy out there splitting wood, I see," he said, pointing to the yard.

"Yes; do you know him?"

"I have seen him," replied the peddler, evasively.

"And where?—who is he?—what is he?"

"A jail-bird!" and the peddler swung his pack over his shoulder; "that boy, young as he looks, I saw in the court myself, and heard his sentence—ten months; he's a hard one—you'd do well to look keener after him."

"Oh! there's something so horrible in the word 'jail,' the poor woman trembled as she laid away her purchases, nor could she be easy till she had called the boy in and assured him that she knew the dark part of his history.

Alarmed and distressed, the child hung down his head; his cheeks seemed bursting with his suppressed sobs, and his hands, as if they were brandished in his flesh.

"Well," he muttered, his whole frame relaxing as if a burden of guilt or joy had suddenly rolled off, "I may as well go to ruin at once—there's no use in trying to be better—everybody hates and despises me—nobody cares about me. I may as well go to ruin at once!"

"Tell me," said the woman, who stood off far enough for flight, if that should be necessary; "how came you to go so young to that dreadful place? Where was your mother?"

"Mother?" exclaimed the boy, with a rush of grief that was terrible to behold. "Oh, I haven't got her mother! I haven't had no mother since I was a baby. If I'd only a mother," he continued, his anguish growing vehement, and the tears gushing out of his strange-looking gray eyes, "I wouldn't 'a been bound out and kicked, and cuffed, and laid on to with whips; I wouldn't 'a got knocked down and then run away and stole, because I was hungry. Oh! I haven't got no mother since I was a baby."

The strength was all gone from the poor boy, and he sunk on his knees sobbing, great choking sobs, and rubbing the hot tears with his knuckles.

And did that woman stand there unmoved? Did she boldly bid him pack up and be off—the jail-bird!

No, no—she had been a mother, and, although all her children slept under the cold sod in the churchyard, was a mother still.

She went up to that poor boy, not to hasten him away, but to lay her fingers kindly, softly on his head—to tell him to look up, and from henceforth find in her a mother. Yes, she even put her arms around the neck of that forsaken, deserted child—she poured from her mother's heart sweet, womanly words of counsel and tenderness.

Oh! how sweet was her sleep that night—how soft was her pillow! She had linked a poor suffering heart to hers by the most silken, the strongest bands of love. She had plucked some thorn from the path of a little sinning but striving mortal. None but angels could witness her holy joy, and not envy.

Did the boy leave her still; a vigorous, manly, promising youth, his low character of his countenance had given place to an open, pleasing expression, with depth enough to make it an interesting study. His foster father is dead; his good foster mother aged and sickly—but she knows no want. The once poor outcast is her only dependence, and nobody does he repay the trust.

He that saveth a soul from death, hideth a multitude of sins."

Gorillas.

If Mr. Darwin's notion that the human race may have developed from the monkey tribes had any scientific basis, it would be a little humiliating to other branches of the original stock.

The gorilla is six feet two inches in height, and three feet between the shoulder-blades. The pair is that of a giant—three times the size of a human hand. The finger measures six inches in circumference at the base. There is an immense ridge running perpendicularly over the cranium; and the great jaws are packed with muscle of prodigious strength.

The creature has huge arms, altogether disproportioned to the body. It has black hair, and has a terrible look on its head, which it has the power of bringing over its face. It has almost the sagacity of a man, and almost the ferocity of a fiend. The male is terribly pugnacious; the female always fights. When they make their attack, they beat their breasts with their fists, making a sound which can be heard a mile. Their cry, which has a terrific resemblance to the human voice—can be heard three miles amid the reverberations of the hills.

As they approach their adversary, they endeavor to intimidate him. One would think this was easily done. The fearful sound, those frantic eyes, glaring with the intelligence and malignity of a demon, were enough to shake nerves not easily disturbed from their equipoise.

One hero lost five or six men in these strange engagements. Think of the tremendous strength that, with one blow of the arm, could crush the ribs like pipe-stems, and tear out a piece of the side; and that, with a single movement of the jaw, could crush the barrel of a gun as if it had been a stick of candy! Another fact: There are no lions in the best of the gorilla.

A Dutch Legend.

On the quay of the Emperor at Amsterdam stands a house dated 1622. It is three stories high, and terminates in a gable surcharged with those illipian obelisks which seem to have been, at a certain epoch, the favorite ornament of Dutch architecture.

In a frieze that separates the first story from the second are six heads of men, some scowled with haire, the others crowned with helmets. The style is heavy and the sculpture mediocre, but the house has its legend.

It belonged in olden times to a negotiant, who had accumulated all manner of riches. Seven robbers leagued together for the purpose of seizing his treasures, which he had the name of being able to take at his pleasure. They waited until one Saturday evening, for on that day the negotiant, with his family and servants, had gone to Brock, leaving his dwelling in the sole charge of an aged serving woman. The robbers went silently to work in the night to excavate a subterranean passage, by which to gain an entrance through the floors of the kitchen.

Once within, they could easily have pillaged the house, after having strangled the domestic.

On that night the servant sat watching near a lamp in the kitchen, and knitting. She heard, confusedly at first, more distinctly afterward, the sound made by the robbers at their work. She felt the vague fear that warns one of the approach of an unknown danger, but, as she was a brave woman, she did not allow herself to become frightened, and, seizing a long knife which she found in the kitchen, sharpened it upon the stone; then, after lowering the wick of the lamp in such a manner as to leave the room very dark, she stationed herself in a corner armed and prepared.

Presently she saw one of the square feet stones raised and fall over as if lifted by an invisible power; then another; and then a third; and then a fourth; and then a fifth; and then a sixth; and then a seventh; and then a eighth; and then a ninth; and then a tenth; and then a eleventh; and then a twelfth; and then a thirteenth; and then a fourteenth; and then a fifteenth; and then a sixteenth; and then a seventeenth; COMMUNICATED.

To the Editor of the Puget Sound Herald: STEAMER RANGER, Union City, May 25, '61.

Today I visited Capt. Goldard Keller's logging camp, situated about one mile from Union City, and have taken a long walk to view the country around it.

I think those hardy men of the forest must be very good, they seem to be so happy in the morning, after breakfast. They go to the woods as merry as larks...

The sawyers, swappers and tamers all perform their part, and at evening a boom of sawing may be seen in the bay close by...

LATEST EASTERN NEWS.

YREKA, May 26. The Pony arrived at Fort Churchill yesterday evening, with dates to May 17th from St. Louis to the Union. The Secretary of the Treasury has issued a circular to Collectors and Surveyors of Ports, and declares that he has recently addressed those in the Northeast and Northwest, prohibiting certain supplies for the South.

THE NEZ PERCES MINES. These mines still continue to hold out rich promises to the gold seeker. The latest advices are not less favorable than any before received. A former resident of this place writes as follows to a friend here respecting them:

PERCE CITY, W. T., May 19th, 1861. I got your letter of March 17th some three weeks ago, but it was not until the 15th that I was convinced that the mines here will pay $1 a day to the man every day that a man is working with a pickaxe. There is but one ravine that is worked in all the mines that does not pay over $5 to the hand, and it has been given several times. There are no other ravines or creeks, that have claims on them which are properly opened, that do not pay $8 to the hand, and the rest of them pay from $12 to $50 to the hand per day.

THE FOLLOWING LETTER IS FROM TRACY & CO.'S MESSENGER. The following information we glean from the Portland Daily Advertiser of a late date. The extract under date of the 14th April is from a private letter to a citizen of Portland:

OLD FINE CREEK, April 14, 1861. We have been at work making preparations to commence mining, and are all ready, except the sluices, which we will have finished this week. The best prospect we have yet realized was $125 to three pans. Our claims average about eight cents to the pan. We have good fall to the creek, and I think we can make two or three thousand dollars apiece this summer.

THE CONFEDERATE STATES HAVE ISSUED BONDS FOR $5,000,000, payable in twenty years, and bearing 8 per cent interest. Two vessels loaded with tobacco were brought into New York as prizes by the steamer Tanquer.

THE WHOLE NUMBER OF INSPECTORS, DEPUTIES, clerks, laborers, watchmen, etc., employed in the New York Customhouse, under the present system, is about seven hundred, whose appointment devolves on the Collector of the Port.

THE MISSOURI LEGISLATURE HAS ADJOURNED. The State forces are concentrating at Jefferson City. Further news from the East is unimportant.
