THE WRECK.
All night the booming mounds gun
Had pointed along the deep,
And mournfully the rising sun
Looked o'er the tide-worn deep.
A bark from India's coral strand,
Before the raging blast,
Had veiled her top-sails on the strand,
And bowed her noble mast—
We saw her treasurers cast away,
The rocks with pebbles were sown,
And strangely o'er the ruby's ray
Flashed out o'er-frosted snow,
And gold was strewn the wet sands o'er,
Like ashes by a breeze;
And gorgeous robes—but oh! that shone
Had added things than these!

We saw the strong man still and low,
A crushed reed thrown aside;
Yet by that right lip and brow,
Not without strife he died.
And near him on the sea-weed lay—
Till then I had not wept
But well our gushing hearts may say
That there a mother slept!
For her pale arms a babe had pressed
With such a wailing grasp,
Billows had dashed o'er that fond breast,
Yet not undone the clasps.
Her very tresses had been flung
To wrap the fair child's form,
Where still the wet-long streamers hung
All tangled by the storm.

And beautiful, 'midst that wild scene,
Glimped up the boy's dead face,
Like Silvanus's trusting serene,
To melancholy grace
Deep in her bosom lay his head,
With half shut violet eye,
He had known little of her dream,
Naught of her agony!

Oh! human love, whose fainting heart,
Trough all things valiant true,
Is stamped upon thy mortal part
Its passion!
Furly thou hast as 'thet' led,
There is some home for thee,
Where thou shalt rest, remembering not
The moaning of the sea!

THE FIRST GENTLEMAN.
BY "MARK TWAIN."
I had a dream last night, which has about it something of the air of a revelation. I dreamed that the year had drawn to a close, and that the graduating class of Princeton College had met together to determine which of their number should be awarded the gold medal instituted by Mr. Leonard Jerome for the graduate who should be declared by his fellows to be the first gentleman of his class. The proceedings opened with a discussion concerning what constitutes a gentleman. It soon became apparent that there were two very distinctly marked opinions upon this subject, and that the strength of the class was nearly equally divided among them. After the debate had continued for some time without any satisfactory result, it was resolved that inasmuch as there were but two candidates proposed for the medal, testimony should be at once taken as to their worthiness, and then submit the final decision of the matter to a ballot. John Wagner was summoned to testify on behalf of George L. Washington, the candidate of the Old Fogey party. Q. Do you believe George L. Washington to be the first gentleman of the graduating class? A. I do.

Q. Has he got money? A. A bare competency. Q. Is he pious? A. He is. Q. Does he gamble? A. No. Q. Drink? A. No, except that he takes wine at dinner and in drawing-rooms, and upon such occasions; but he is never overcome by it. Q. Does he chew tobacco? A. No. Q. Does he smoke? A. Not to excess; not more than three cigars a day. Q. Does he play billiards? A. Occasionally. Q. Does he fight, drive fast horses, raise thunder, or run all night? A. I am not aware that he does such things. Q. Then what makes you think he is a gentleman? A. Because he lives comfortably, yet not ostentatiously; dresses well, but plainly; abides by all laws, human and divine; is courteous and kindly toward all; is considerate of the feelings of others, and has charity for their weakness and their prejudices; it is seldom that he gets mad, but when he does, he gets mad all over—he redresses grievances then. He stands by his friend first, last, and all the time. He is always taking his time, his patience, and his purse, to make other people's lives happy. He never does a mean thing, and has only just enough small vices to breed in him a humane and liberal spirit when sitting in judgment upon the vices of his neighbors, and keep him from being too disagreeably good for a mere man of flesh and blood.

Other witnesses corroborated the above statements, and the Old Fogies rested their questions, and the Old Fogies rested their questions, and the Old Fogies rested their questions. Q. What do you know of William E. Fourth? A. I know him to be in all respects a brack. Q. Has he got money? A. Rich as Croesus. Q. Is he pious? A. Well—I don't hardly—well, 'taint—'taint his strong suit, as you may say. Q. Does he ever go to church? A. Well, he—don't go as much as he used to. Q. How often does he go? A. Well, you see, he don't get a chance much now. He don't get up till noon on Sundays, and he thinks it puts a kind of dampener on his appetite to go to church before breakfast.

Q. You have not answered my question yet. How often does he go to church? A. —To come down to the fine pits of it, he only goes seldom. But he loves it—I know he loves it. I have known him to go to church in the hardest kind of a rain-storm. (Cheers.) Q. Did he have an umbrella? A.—No, he didn't even have an umbrella. He would scorn it. Q. Was he away from home when he took the notion? A. I believe he was. Q. Now, no trifling—no prevarications! Answer strictly. What did he go in the church for? A.—Well, he—went there to get out of the rain. (Cheers from the other party.)

Q. Does the candidate gamble? A. Him! Why, he's the envy of the public. Take him at any gentlemanly amusement you can name, from faro, for stacks of red checks, down to pitch seven-up for Limburger cheese and lager, and he is prince of them all. Q. Does he drink? A. Oh, don't mention it. Why, he is the pride of the village. He can banish more champagne and Jersey lightning than any man in the State, and still be the gayest of the gay. Q. Does he chew tobacco, or smoke? A. —No, does. He don't lack any gentlemanly accomplishment. Q. Does he dress well? A. Him! Why, he sports the stunningest harness in America; the tightest-legged pants and the shortest-tailed coats, and the reddest cravats on the continent, and the most of them. He gives all the powers of his mind to it, and as a woman-killer there isn't his equal anywhere. Q. Is he convivial? A. He is the most companionable gentleman I know. When he turns out of a night to have a time, somebody's premises have got to suffer; he is a regular calamity to street-lamps and door-bells when he gets started; and if any one objects, why, there's trouble, you know.—And his team is the fastest.

Q. Does he play billiards? A. He can beat the man that invented the game. Q. Does he pay his debts? A. Most regular man in the world. Always gives his note and is affable and polite when a man wants him to renew it. Here the original discussion broke out again, but the Moderns seemed to have the best of the argument. The election closed with the first ballot, and in favor of the Moderns: George L. Washington, 13; William E. Fourth, 14. Amidst the wildest enthusiasm on the part of the Modern party, William E. Fourth was declared the chosen recipient of the Jerome gold medal, as first gentleman of the graduating class. (Sudden sensation outside; all turn toward the door.) Enter William E. Fourth in a state of hilarious excitement. "I licked him, boys! (hic!) I don't know who he was, but I licked him, you bet!"

All—Hooray for the gold medal boy—never fails to whip his man! I want to vote for him again! Who was the man that tackled you? Show us the man? Anyway, hooray! Enter a graduate in dismay, and says: "O, great General, boys, it was Leonard Jerome." (Sudden and oppressive silence.) My dream ended there.

A Mourning Roman.
(From the Washington Intelligencer.)
Some years ago the fashionable world of Gotham was startled from its proprieties at the announcement, in gossiping circles, and shortly after in the sensational papers, that Minnie Baker, the youthful daughter of Mr. Baker, a millionaire, had, in an evil hour, become enamored of her father's coachman, and consented to a secret marriage. The fact, which attachment became known to the father when too late to remedy, and he subsequently disowned the foolish and erring child. Having carried off, with her father's consent, all her jewelry and personal effects, she was enabled to set her husband up in business—in a restaurant, we believe.

Love in a cottage went on smoothly until Mr. Baker died, and it was found he had not forgiven his daughter, and as a consequence had not willed one cent of his immense possessions to her. Mr. Dean, the coachman husband, had a change come over the spirit of his dreams. In his marriage he evidently had an eye to the main chance—the money-bags of his father-in-law; and these failings in their fruition, his love for "Minnie" waned, chilled, till coldness begot neglect; neglect brought forth weeping appeals from the youthful victim; weeping appeals from the victim of a romantic attachment begat abuse from the husband; and thus in the struggle and turmoil of life Dean and his wife were lost to public view, and the story which had excited all Gotham became a part of the dim past. A subsequent act in the domestic tragedy has just transpired in this gloomy city, which we will briefly relate:

A gentleman of our city, who spends considerable time in alleviating the suffering and want in the lower strata of human society, was, some weeks ago, called upon to help a woman in the lowest depth of privation, and in a personal interview with her, although the being before him was dressed in the scanty, ragged and coarse garb of a wretched pauper, and although her breath reeked with the fumes of villainous liquor, yet there was that in her manners, her language, and her tone, which surely indicated that she had moved in higher circles, and that she had been familiar with virtuous life.

An examination revealed the sad fact that the degraded and poverty-stricken being before him was the once celebrated Minnie Baker; that, abused, beaten and starved by her husband, she was finally compelled to leave, and, alas for human nature, to drown her grief and sorrow in liquor! The sympathies of the gentleman were aroused, and he made temporary provisions for her, and afterward induced a religious society to take her in charge and give her a home. Here she remained, apparently contented and grateful, for obvious reasons assuming another name—Sarah Milton. About a month ago she told the matron that a female friend had a shawl belonging to her, and she was going to recover it, and under this plea went out from the home. She was known to have fifty cents with her, given her by a female friend, to make some purchases for her.

Since then she has not been seen by any one interested in her, but definite rumors have reached them that she had purchased liquor at several low "drinkeries." "This and nothing more" is one of the saddest events in domestic life, but sorrowful thoughts suggest themselves which are not creditable to human nature. We cannot see that the stern faith was justified, on any correct principles, in thus abandoning a daughter to a fate which he must have foreseen. We most sincerely trust, for the sake of human nature, that the consciences of the brothers, who inherited the immense wealth of Mr. Baker,—thus increased by worse than death of a sister—are daily and nightly agitated, and that they will continue so till they seek out and provide for and save (for who will doubt that she can be saved!) an only sister.

German Unity and Freedom.
(From the Deutsches Wochenblatt—Munich, Bairen.)
The most peculiar phenomena of our times belongs to the fact that people now only speak of unity, and hardly ever mention freedom. Formerly, freedom was held to be the highest object of political efforts, and unity was considered as the consequence of freedom; now ideas have completely changed, and in certain circles one hears the phrase—let us only have unity and freedom will soon follow. One will be misled by the latter view, if one connects false meanings to the word unity, and if one does not remember that it is not the object itself, that it is not something to be striven for per se, but only to be regarded as means to social ends. With reference to the latter, it is clear that unity ought only to be the means for the realization of political freedom, and only to be wished for in so far as it contributes to that.

Hence it follows that unity and freedom may be quite different things, and it is only the question what freedom means in a given case. It appears that people are exchanging the unity which we have striven after for centuries on the basis of freedom and for the realization of the same, for that to which we have come nearer through the instrumentality of the House of Hohenzollern, in Prussia. The House of Hohenzollern, with its Count Bismarck, understands by the unity of Germany the rule of Borussia absolute royalty over so many thousand subjects as can be subjected by force, and they regard unity not as a means of the realization of freedom, but as a means of the suppression of the same.

Where a single man is to rule, where the highest state wisdom is attributed to a single man, different opinions and different wills are not wished for; the objects of the individual ruler are state objects; political freedom both for them, and it must be limited to the smallest amount, or so as it is not prejudicial. Prussia has extended her absolute power over a greater number of subjects, and the struggle for freedom has been rendered more difficult in proportion as the dominion of the sword has been extended over a greater surface. Every where efforts are being made to improve the army regulations and rifle practice—but to whose benefit? To the benefit of dynastic lusts for which people are to lack each other to pieces.

In this sense we have come nearer to unity by the events of the past year, as so far as we have come nearer to this, we have receded from freedom. If an absolute power is to rule Germany, it is perhaps better that there should only be one, and the Prussian absolutism is perhaps to be preferred to the Austrian. Had it been a question of establishing the rule of absolutism in Germany, every German must have taken side with one great ruling party or the other. But did we wish, as we wish, for political uniform slavery? or, as such as the French have?

We have become the first people of culture in Europe, in consequence of the decentralization of powers. It is true military, and diplomatic decentralization, the strength of which was scattered out, the strength in respect to foreign powers, it is, about thirty-three; but precisely because there were a number, every one of which pursued his own course, the injury of the centralization of all powers by a single ruler, and of monopoly of development, was prevented by special or individual developments, according to various methods of Governments producing a varied German intellectual life, which otherwise could only be produced by greater political freedom. Hence we became intellectually great, and consequently any system that will not destroy the fruits of our intellectual development must be built on the system of confederate membership.

Not that we wish to put dethroned princes on the throne again; that would be madness. What we desire is the self-government of the single States with regard to interior administration, and this includes in itself the preservation of the existing Constitutions in the annexed countries. Centralization in these makes men after one and the same model, life becomes invidious, and freedom is easily suppressed by the hand of one, as is the case in France; and they are now striving after a centralized, absolute State in Prussia, at this exact moment.

Hence we must struggle against this tendency. The striving after unity with respect to military and diplomatic representation we hail as welcome, but only if it is controlled by a German Parliament, only if the freedom of the people is guaranteed by a constitutive assembly; only if we have not to obey the King, only if the central power has to take the views of an Assembly of chosen German representatives as its guide in acting. But the Prussian Government, which has seized on the central power, not only does not act according to the views of such an assembly, but even opposes the views of a similar assembly in its own country, tries to intimidate it by persecutions and acts of violence of all kinds, and comes forward with the shameless declaration that it has vanquished the interior foe with the foreign one. It therefore puts tried patriots on the same level with a foreign enemy, who has the ruin of the State in view, and this same Government has declared that in case of a similar conflict with the national representatives it would act exactly the same again as before, that is, that it would scoff at the Constitution.

The Bureau (Ill.) county Republican says that a few days since, at a party in that place, a young man jokingly asked a young lady if she would have him, to which she quickly replied, "Yes." He immediately left the house amid the laughter of all present, but in a remarkably short time returned, and said he had come back to marry her. He was asked "When?" and replied "Now," and the ceremony was duly performed by a "Squire standing by. After the excitement of the moment had subsided, some suggested that it was a pity that the "Squire hadn't a license to marry them as it was too bad to have such a joke spoiled for want of the necessary papers. Thereupon the "Squire drew from his vest 'the papers,' and convinced them that there was no joke about it, but, on the other hand a reality; the bride was completely nonplussed for a moment upon learning the true state of the case, but finally allowed she could stand if he could. At last accounts they had shown no signs of repentance for the hasty marriage.

The motives that actuate some men to err, are often unaccountable to themselves. The wise are they who never complain.

Stewart and Astor.
A New York paper thus describes and compares the habits of these two famous merchant Princes:
A. T. Stewart is not what is called a liberal man. He seldom looks at a subscription paper. He has little sympathy with vagrancy. Men and women who seek his presence seldom gain much by an interview, if money is the object. Indeed it is very difficult to gain access to him in any way. He is intensely devoted to business, and works more hours, probably, than any merchant in New York. He controls his own affairs with despotic sway. His partners have no control over the business, but are merely interested in the profits. He buys and sells as he pleases, without consulting anyone. In his down town store he has a small office where he spends his time from early business hours till dark. No man goes up stairs without running a gauntlet.

A gentleman meets all comers at the lower door with, "What is your business?" "I want to see Mr. Stewart." "I must know your business, or you cannot see him." "My business is private, I want to see Mr. Stewart personally." "Mr. Stewart has no private business, sir. Unless you tell me what you want, Mr. Stewart will not see you." If the response is satisfactory, he is allowed to go up stairs.

Here he is met by another gentleman, and put through a another rigid examination. The usher disappears behind a glass partition. Soon Mr. Stewart will be seen peering at the visitor. If he likes his looks he admits him; if not, he sends him away. No man who has run the ordeal once will do it a second time without a cause. But, on great occasions, the donations of Mr. Stewart are princely. He proposes now to devote millions to build houses for the poor. If the city still refuses to give the site, he will still carry out his plan.

Unlike Mr. Stewart, William B. Astor is always accessible. His rooms are on Prince street, a door or two from Broadway. They are the same that were occupied by his father. He has a front and back office, where the business of his great estate is carried on. The door is wide open between the two offices. A person asking for Mr. Astor, is directed at once to the rear room. At a common desk, crowded with papers, sits a German-looking man, about seventy, heavily moulded, tall and stout. His eyes, which are small, with an expression bordering on stupidity, are fastened on the visitor, and Mr. Astor waits his utterances. He wastes no words. His answers are yes, or no, with an air that admits of no debate. All day long, from ten to five, Mr. Astor sits in his office and sees all comers. He is master of his business. He knows the rent of every house, the duration of every lease, the time and terms of payment, with every foot of land. At five o'clock he rises, and with slow and sluggish gate turns into Broadway, and walks to Lafayette Place, where he resides, for dinner.

He has two sons, John Jacob, and William B. Jr. These young men are in business with their father. No bankers in New York attend more closely to their calling; they walk down town in the morning and up at night with the great crowd of business men, as if they, in common with so many others, were fortune to make. Much of the tact and shrewdness of their grandfather attaches to them. They are to the third generation. Besides not descending, they inherited they have sides what they have, and should their father die of a fortune of their own, they have the ability, father die to-morrow they are to maintain industry, adaptiveness to business. To carry the honor of the honor of the name as the estate in their father's style. They are modest, retiring and without affectation.

John Jacob is tall, large, heavily built, with sandy hair and complexion, resembling his father. He went to the field in 1851, and did good service for the National cause. Will B. Jr. is tall and slim, with black hair, of a genteel build, and is said to resemble his mother.

THE RAILROAD BUILDER.—This is a machine invented by W. D. Robertson, of Humboldt county, Nevada, for the purpose of laying down railway ties and rails. It is described as follows:
The frame work of the machine is sixty feet long, twelve feet wide, and eight feet high. One third in length of the machine rests on trucks, the remainder projecting over the track. Between the trucks is to be a ten horse power engine, and that together with the great load of ties at the rear, will serve to keep the forward and suspended portion of the machine from tipping down. It will move forward on the track as it is laid down by it. The ground in front of the machine is leveled by means of a plow, and the ties, carried forward over the heads of the workmen, are swung down from endless chains and laid precisely where wanted. The rails are picked up from either side of the engine and carried forward in a similar manner, and a signal from the fireman, are adjusted by machinery in their proper places across the ties. The chairs are then nailed to the ties, the rails firmly spiked, and the machine moves forward to lay another length; constant supplies of ties and rails being brought up over the track on the common trucks. A system of rods and screws is arranged to accommodate the apparatus to any kind of grade. The engineer is furnished a position above the frame-work, from which he can control the movements of the machine, and overlook the labor of the men employed about it. Twenty men are required about the machine, and it is estimated that with that number of hands six miles of track can be laid by it in one day. The inventor is confident that the machine can be made to lay twelve miles of track in a single day.

The Vivalia (Cal.) Delta relates the following:
A month before Ward was killed, in Kern county, he dreamed that he and another person were standing together, when a woman threw a snake between them, and told them to run or it would bite them. They ran but the snake bit Ward on the left breast. The impression was so vivid that Ward related his dream to several persons. The first words spoken by W. when he recovered from his fainting after the shot were: "Just where the snake bit me!" Explain it.

The wages of the female operatives at the Merrimack Mills, in Lowell, Mass., have been reduced, and some of the girls are on a strike.
It is not good for human nature to have the road of life too easy, for it is better to be under the necessity of working hard and faring meanly, than to have everything done for us and a pillow of down to repose upon.
A Drunken fellow sitting upon the steps of a church in Boston, the cold wind blowing round the corner, exclaimed: "If Heaven (hic) tempest the wind to the storm lamb, I wish the lamb (hic) was on this corner."
An American circus company are going to Paris to perform during the Exposition. A cute Quaker is at the head of it.

MISCELLANY.
BIRCHAM YOUNG—THE CAREER OF HIS WIFE.—Mary Angell Young is the first living and legal wife of the prophet. She is a native of New York, and a fine looking intelligent woman. She is large, portly, and dignified. Her hair is well sprinkled with the frosts of age, her clear hazel eyes and melancholy countenance indicates a soul where sorrow rules supreme. She has been much attached to her husband, and his infidelity has made deep inroads upon her mind. Her deep-seated melancholy often produces flights of insanity, which increases with her declining years.

Lucy Decker is the first wife in "plurality," or the second "woman." Lucy Decker was married to Isaac Seelye, and had two children. She afterwards became a Mormon, and went to Nauvoo to reside. Her husband, Seelye, was somewhat dissipated, but treated her well. She, however, saw Brigham, and loved him. He visited her, told her that Seelye could never give her an "exaltation" in the eternal world; that he being high in the priesthood could make her a queen in the first resurrection. She yielded to these inducements, and the promptings of her own inclinations, left her husband, and was "sealed" to Brigham Young. Lucy Decker has brown hair, dark eyes, small features, fair skin, and short of stature, embonpoint. She would strongly remind you of a New England wife, "fat fair and forty." In common with nearly all the inmates of the harem, she is of very ordinary intellect and limited education.

Clark Decker, sister of Lucy Decker, is a short, thick-set person, very much like Lucy in appearance. She is much more intelligent and agreeable than her sister and is every way her superior. She is also quite a favorite with the prophet; has three or four children, and is much attached to her husband. Harriet C. was early in plurality, having been sealed to Brigham as "Water Quarters," on the Missouri river, while the Mormons were on their way to Utah. This was five years before polygamy was publicly proclaimed as a divine institution. Harriet is very tall, has light hair, blue eyes, a fair complexion, and a sharp nose. She is rather slender, but has much power of endurance, and a look of determination.

Dr. Adonis, after various wanderings, has turned up in Utah. In a letter from the promised land he writes as follows about Brigham Young's last wife: "I saw the President's last wife at the tabernacle on Sunday last. The lady's name before marriage was Maria Folsom. Her former residence was at Council Bluffs, Iowa. She is an imperious looking young beauty, of the Grecian rather than the Roman order, and is very imperious and jealous. Like all his passionate and jealous women, she is noble hearted. Miss Folsom is Brigham Young's last wife and pet. Two of the President's daughters play at the theatre, and are great favorites with the gentile portion of the community. One is married, Mrs. Clawson; and the other, Miss Jane, is being waited on by a distinguished editor."

WHY FOLKS READ LOCALS.—People read articles of local interest for reasons as opposite as man and wife. A reads about a fight because he was there and saw it. B reads because he wasn't there, and didn't see it, because he had heard about it, and D because he hadn't; while those who had a hand in it, wanted to know how much of truth corroborated them the editor had deemed compatible in its utterance, with a continuation of his own earthly career. The consciousness, too, that hundreds of others are perusing the same article simultaneously, and that it is, therefore, the subject of common thought and conversation, doubtless adds to the zest with which ordinary readers eagerly devour articles which otherwise would have but a dull perusal or no perusal at all.

We find the following in your issue of per. "Mr. Editor, I observed in your issue of yesterday a card signed C. Mc Coy, warning all persons from trusting me on his account, as I had left his bed and board, out just cause or provocation. I therefore, take this method of informing the public that he never had a bed, the board has always been furnished by myself, and as to anybody trusting me on his account, I know of none who would trust himself. His credit has always been below par, so much so that he could not get trusted for his own shirting, and now wears some my under-clothing on his back, slightly altered."
GEORGINA MCCOY.

There was a man born and raised in Henry county, Ky., (says an exchange) connected with whose history is a remarkable circumstance. He was married on the 24th of February, his birthday, and on every two years thereafter, on the 24th of February, he was blessed with an heir, until three children were born to him. Strange to tell on the next 24th of February his wife died. On February 24th 1866 the gentleman married. What occurred to him on the 24th of last February we have not heard.

The Zanesville (Ohio) Signal gives a sketch of the extraordinary travels of a letter, which, after a lapse of fourteen years, has finally come back to the man who wrote it. It was mailed at a post-office in Noble county, Ohio, to Cincinnati, in the year 1853, an enclosed a ten dollar bill on an Alabama bank. Not being called for, it was sent to the dead letter office, at Washington. From there it was returned to the writer, but he could not be found. Then it was again sent to the dead-letter office. A few days ago it was received at the Zanesville office, and delivered to the original writer, who, after the lapse of fourteen years, had some difficulty in recalling the fact of ever having written such a letter.

The wages of the female operatives at the Merrimack Mills, in Lowell, Mass., have been reduced, and some of the girls are on a strike.
It is not good for human nature to have the road of life too easy, for it is better to be under the necessity of working hard and faring meanly, than to have everything done for us and a pillow of down to repose upon.
A Drunken fellow sitting upon the steps of a church in Boston, the cold wind blowing round the corner, exclaimed: "If Heaven (hic) tempest the wind to the storm lamb, I wish the lamb (hic) was on this corner."
An American circus company are going to Paris to perform during the Exposition. A cute Quaker is at the head of it.

Local Matters.

RAISING THE WIND.—A soldier who had been deputed to draw the rations of the company to which he belonged, came to the shop of Durgan & Co., butchers, some days ago, and offered to sell an order on them for a large quantity of beef, for a ridiculously little sum. On being asked how the company were going to get along without beef, he replied that they were tired of beef straight, and had authorized him to sell the order and buy vegetables. They refused to buy the order, and he left. Next day he came up missing, when it was discovered that he had not only found a purchaser for the beef order, but had also sold the tickets for all the bread due the company for the month of May. He may have got twenty dollars for both. Of course the purchasers were the losers.

OCCIDENTAL BASE BALL CLUB.—We are pleased to notice that this association is improving in popularity as well as efficiency; there is no sport that has any more essential benefits to bestow on its votaries than this, besides giving the required exercise to those of sedentary employment, the sport is mainly a quick eye, ready action, celerity of movement, alertness, precision, and an easy adaptation to unexpected emergencies. Since the above was in type we learn the Club have decided to give a ball, at Metropolis Hall, on Wednesday evening next; and from the extremely modest price of the tickets, (only $2) we predict the affair will be well attended.

THE ALTA HOUSE.—This long established and very popular hotel has undergone a remarkable change since it came into the hands of its present proprietor, Mr. Andrew Riggs. The place has been enlarged, renovated and improved generally. The mechanics have just completed hard-finishing the upper story of the addition, which has been divided into suits of spacious rooms.

BACK HOME.—The Rev. J. B. A. Brullette, Y. O., so long officiating priest at the Catholic church in this city, returned on Thursday from a lengthy sojourn in the east. The presence of the reverend gentleman amongst us again will afford much satisfaction to his numerous friends, by whom he is most highly esteemed.

WHAT'S THE MATTER?—We have not heard a confounded word from that editor of ours since he left here. We can't imagine what he's done with himself, and unless we hear from him by the time of our next issue we shall give him up as lost, and advertise him.

A MATCH GAME OF BASE BALL.—The Occidental Base Ball club of this city, have challenged the Pioneer Base Ball Club of Portland, to play a match game in this city on the 25th inst.; the challenge has been accepted, and all matters arranged for the contest. We shall venture no prediction as to what may be the result of this contest, but we can assure the Pioneers that no effort will be spared by the Occidentals to render their visit agreeable in every respect.

MAGIC VS. MUSIC.—Messrs. Herman and O'Neil, two talented men in their respective naves, gave entertainments at Metropolis Hall on Wednesday and Thursday evenings of this week to very respectable audiences. On Thursday a number of the children, orphans and boarders, from the mission, were permitted to attend, and were perfectly delighted. The usual courtesies were extended to the Press.

IMPROVEMENT.—We observe that Mr. David Brown has commenced extensive improvements on his premises in this city. We hear it is his intention to move his building some feet east of its present position, and add an observatory to it to be used as a hall for public purposes.

BARBERS.—There are libels on humanity in this community, facetiously called men, who make a practice of setting apart a couple of hours each day for the corporal correction of their families—commencing with their wives and concluding with the youngest child. As the law does not take cognizance of this species of offense, we shall have to take the law in our own hands and hold them up to the scorn of an outraged community.

A NEW PAPER.—The Roseburg Ensign is the name of a little paper just started at Roseburg, Ogn. It is just about large enough to wrap a pound of candles in, but is a first rate little paper for all that.

IDAHO CITY BURNED.—Mr. Briggs, of Wells, Fargo & Co., (says the Oregonian of the 24th inst.) received a telegram yesterday afternoon, from San Francisco, stating that Idaho city was burned on the 18th. It is a somewhat singular coincidence, that the great fire of 1855, which destroyed nearly the whole town, occurred on the 18th of May.

HORSE RACE.—The repeatedly postponed race for $200 a side between Charley Bird's horse and Mike Shea's mare, came off over the Fourth Plain track, at noon last Saturday. The mare gained an easy victory.

REAR.—In excavating for the foundation of a house in the rear of Crawford & Co's store, a few days ago, the workmen found a four-pound cannon ball imbedded in the hard cement some distance beneath the surface. Nothing like a reasonable conjecture could be given for its presence there.

LUMBER.—HERRER'S MILL, CLARKE CO. W. T., March 30, 1877. You will not find the Pupplet that the Saw Mill is finished and can furnish Lumber by the M. Wanted immediately a man with a Logging team at $10 wages. Permanent employment may be given. J. HENNER.

A Card.

VANCOUVER, W. T., May 18th, 1867. Editor Reviewer:—As there are efforts made by the Republican party to defeat Mr. Clark, by using my name in opposition to him, I write this to assure the Democratic party that I shall support and use my influence to elect him as our Delegate to Congress. LEWIS VAN VLEET.
