Current Topics.

Walla Walla, most beautiful of all the towns in Washington Territory, most favorably located of all the cities east of the Cascade mountains, blessed with the most salubrious climate, and situated in the center of the best wheat and fruit producing region on the Pacific Coast, has relied heretofore upon these natural advantages, and her present status is due to them and to them alone.

An impression prevails with some that mortgages are now taxed as under the law of 79. Such is not the case; but mortgagors on growing crops are now made liable for crop insurance.

The Rising Tide.

WASHINGTON.—SCOR ROBESON and his confederates in the House have been exercising to the most effective method of bringing forward their scheme for subsidies. Members of the Committees on Naval Affairs, on Commerce, and on Post Offices have conferred, and the plan is to report a bill for subsidizing ocean mail service by steam, on the basis of that now allowed to railroads.

The combination for subsidies is strong, and both branches of Congress may be said to be organized in their interest. That is to say, the committees are plainly packed to favor jobbery, and nothing but the threats of public exposure, such as happened when the Thurman act was driven through the Senate in the face of a majority pledged against it, will prevent the success of several large projects of plunder.

These jobbers do not expect to pass any bill, sure and simple, on its own merits. But when the scheme is got in shape before the House, they intend to mount it as a rider on one of the appropriations, and finally, in case of unexpected opposition, to fall back on the committee of conference. So far as the House is concerned, SCOR ROBESON has the game in his own hands.

Precedents and custom have heretofore controlled the action of the Senate in such matters. In other words, the presiding officer of the Senate by usage accepts the names handed to him by the person in charge of any given bill, when conferees are appointed, though he is supposed, under the rules, to select them himself.

The lobby at Washington this winter exceeds in numbers and in exacting aims that has been seen in the corridors of Congress for many years. From 1876 to 1878, although the Democratic reform House of Representatives took possession in 1875, the appropriations had already been made for the fiscal year 1875-76—the lobby had a hard time until near the close of the last Congress. It came to be understood that big jobs and state claims and highly flavored enterprises stood little chance of success while the guardians of the Treasury were on duty.

The Star route robbery went through, however, and, as is well understood, it cost the contractors a very round sum for the black list of patriots which is said to be still in existence. If they had consented to pay the syndicate of blackmailers, most of whom turned reformers, the twenty-five thousand dollars originally demanded, it is quite probable there would have been no investigation at all, and certainly the contractors would have had much fuller pockets to-day.

But the record shows that the great bulk of the Republicans, aided by a few venal Democrats, voted for Brady's Deficiency bill of two millions, and subsequently for the regular Post Office bill, which whitewashed his corruption.

The surplus in the Treasury has attracted the greed of all the jobbers. They swarm at the Capitol Hill with huge plans for depicting the public vaults. Capt. Eade asks an endorsement for fifty million dollars. He dines and wines the press on a magnificent scale, and threatens to go to Europe for his capital unless Uncle Sam hurries to accept his modest terms. The claim agents have footed up three hundred and odd millions for arrearages of pensions alone, and they have laid the foundations for a thousand millions more.

These facts are not put before the people with the view of creating this impression in our land would say, thank you, sir, when made to understand the truth as it is.

When information is so cheap that it can be obtained for the asking it would be in much better taste for those who go into the criticizing business, and perhaps even their some humiliation, if they would first arm themselves with facts on which to make their onslaught. There certainly would be less fault-finding and less occasion given for prejudice against us on the part of those who would benefit us as well as themselves in the carrying on of any public enterprise in our community. So we thought last week when we heard an honest granger proclaim that freights on fruit to Spokane Falls had been increased to $80 per ton, prohibiting shipment in that direction.

The McAllister Case.

NEW TACOMA, W. T., Feb. 20, 1882. Ed. Post-Intelligencer:

In Sunday's issue I am accused of "trickery and fraud practiced upon the Governor of Washington Territory in securing the pardon of William McAllister," and am challenged "to explain away this black charge." I owe it to Governor Newell, more than to myself, to ask that a share of the odium which attaches to that act may be borne by myself.

No apologies need now be offered for my efforts to procure the pardon of William McAllister, convicted of murder in the second degree at the Walla Walla court, May, 1882, Hon. J. R. Lewis presiding. That distinguished Judge sentenced the prisoner to seventeen years confinement in the penitentiary. In the coming May, ten years of that term will have elapsed. I do sincerely regret that Governor Newell should have been so harshly censured. I could not, however, have anticipated such a result, nor would I have expected his compliance with any wish of mine in defiance of public opinion. To me, there seems less extenuation for McAllister's so perfidiously violating the solemn pledges which were conditions precedent to his liberation than for the very grave crime for which he was convicted.

If that base ingratitude could be disregarded I should have no regret whatever that efforts of mine were directed to shortening McAllister's term of imprisonment. Since early in 1877 I have been of the opinion that McAllister was entitled to executive clemency, and I have endeavored to accomplish such result. At that time I had interviews with T. J. Anders, Esq., who succeeded Hon. N. T. Cator as Prosecuting Attorney of the First Judicial District, the latter being the officer securing McAllister's conviction) and Hon. J. R. Lewis, the trial Judge, asking them to concur in an application for pardon. Ex-Prosecuting Attorney Cator recommended pardon at that date. Judge Lewis will state that I maintained that no pardon should be granted except upon the recommendation of the Judge who tried the case and that the Prosecuting Attorney should have knowledge of the pendency of the application. Gov. Ferry will also state that as early as that date I appeared as attorney, urging that pardon. Gen. Howard, U. S. Army, visited McAllister in his cell at Steilacoom, became interested in his case, and tendered to me that spring his valuable influence, his earnest sympathies. That year marks his campaign against Joseph and the Nez Perces, which alone prevented his co-operation in the unsuccessful effort then made. My belief is that he filed a letter favoring the pardon. The papers upon which the application was based are on file in the executive office. They fully justify the Governor's action; upon the case presented McAllister was entitled to an absolute and unconditional pardon.

On the 14th of December, 1881, Hon. J. R. Lewis, the Judge by whom McAllister was tried and sentenced, gave to the son of the prisoner an able letter reviewing the case and earnestly recommending the pardon. It was of itself sufficient. To have disregarded that appeal, a certificate that McAllister had suffered sufficient punishment, would have been almost inhumanity.

Hon. N. T. Cator, the Prosecuting Attorney, had recommended the pardon as early as February, 1877. Petitions signed (I speak from memory) by about 180 persons in the spring of 1877, were filed by me when I filed the letter of Chief Justice Lewis. Among the petitioners were prominent citizens of Walla Walla, including members of the grand and petit juries.

The majority of the members of the Legislative Assembly, accompanied by the Governor, in October last visited the penitentiary. McAllister was called up and made his appeal to the Governor in presence of the members. I had not seen him for four years. From a powerful man of large frame he had become reduced to an emaciated, feeble—broken in health and spirits, entirely subdued by his long confinement. His keeper united in attesting to his good conduct; two of the Penitentiary contractors favored his release—applied for his pardon; both the physicians of the prison concurred in the opinion that if he were not liberated, his sentence for a term of years would prove an imprisonment for life. Every member who saw the old man signed the petition to the Governor asking for his pardon.

With such reasons for a pardon, with such publicity of application, what need or opportunity for "fraud? Indeed, I am justified in the belief that it would have been cruelly to have continued the confinement of an aged paralytic, 62 years old in infirm health, gradually sinking away, that old man had served well nigh ten years imprisonment; far more punishment than accorded to many abundant worse criminals. He was broken down; his property had been wasted away during his confinement. From easy circumstances he had become poor. Twice had he been stricken with paralysis, and nothing but his indomitable will and iron constitution had enabled him to survive the shocks. A son and daughter just entering upon life's struggle were deeply humiliated by their father's imprisonment; with affectionate solicitude they begged that he might be restored to them to weary out his fast ending life; they implored for the privilege to attend him in his old age; they asked that he might not be confined within the walls of a prison merely to die. The judge who had sentenced him had deliberately asserted their father had suffered sufficient punishment. I am not ashamed to confess that my warmest sympathies were enlisted for that old man and his more than orphaned children. For him, for them, it was a pleasure to labor. Nay, I trusted him. I believed him and in him. It will never call the blush to my cheek to acknowledge that he had all my best wishes and efforts for his freedom. All the "trickery and fraud" used to impose upon Governor Newell in this case bring no humiliation, no regret to me. No cause for censure of him because he obeyed the dictate of humanity. Since Governors have been invested with the pardoning power, never did more urgent reasons justify its exercise. But the Governor feared that if McAllister returned to his old home, funds might be revived. It was his right to do and he did it upon a condition that McAllister should not return. The condition was neither harsh nor unreasonable and McAllister solemnly pledged himself to comply therewith. I am confident that Governor Newell would not have released McAllister except upon his implicit confidence that such condition would be fully complied with. I had faith in McAllister. I believed that he could be trusted. With utmost reliance that my confidence was well placed, I assured the Governor he would leave the Territory and not return. That the Governor acted upon my faith in McAllister's integrity I have reason to believe. With painful mortification I acknowledge I was cruelly deceived. Nor will I extenuate that faith violated, that trust betrayed. It terribly humiliated me. It shook my faith in men. Thanks to Governor Newell, again for favors bestowed which you truly say "I can never adequately repay him." Generously and promptly he acquitted me of all complicity with that perfidious ingratitude of McAllister—to whom he had restored freedom, to whom he had extended a lease of life. In a friendly note to me Governor Newell writes: "I do not doubt your good faith, nor do I wish you to feel annoyed about it." Again: "I know that you are greatly mortified and incensed, and as I have before written to you, have no shadow of doubt of your best intention in the entire case."

I have done nothing since the appointment of Prosecuting Attorney of the 3d Judicial District was conferred by Governor Newell which should cause him to regret his selection. My sense of gratitude for his partiality invokes me to use the privilege of your columns to defend his act in pardoning William McAllister, invoked by humanity, justified by the circumstances of the case, the only conclusion which could be rightly reached on the papers filed. It is humiliating in the extreme to be compelled to acknowledge that McAllister's peridy has seemed to demonstrate that the Governor's clemency and the sympathy of those who aided in securing that pardon were bestowed upon a heartless man unable to appreciate a generous service.

Respectfully,
ELWOOD EVANS.

Comparisons are Odious.

American spreadeagleism—we all know what that is—arouses itself from its lair, shakes terribly its mane, snarls, flaps its wings over the hemisphere, and screams in the sentiment, if not exactly in the poetical language of the cockney of Piccadilly: "We do not want to fight, but by Jingo! We've got the men, we've got the ships, we've got the money, too!"

The metaphor is badly mixed. So is American spreadeagleism.

British jingoism and American spreadeagleism are things alike in kind. The chief difference between them is in their names and the words they use. The former expresses itself in execrable rhyme, as above. The latter expresses itself in damnable prose, as follows—to wit: "The Clayton-Bulwer treaty must be terminated. The United States must control and protect alone any interoceanic canal across the isthmus in order to make sure of its rights, and it is now prepared to maintain that position in diplomacy and in fact, in peace and in war."

Let us see whether the assertion of American spreadeagleism is supported by the facts.

1. It is assumed that "we've got the men." The land forces constituting the American standing army, as now organized, are as follows:

Table with 2 columns: Regiment/Force and Men. Includes Cavalry, Infantry, Artillery, Engineers, etc.

These numbers of the different branches of English land service are taken from the army estimates for 1879-80, which appear to have contemplated a considerable reduction of the land forces. A return made by the war office to parliament in 1878 gave the following as the whole number of the land forces in the three divisions of the kingdom:

Table with 3 columns: Division, English, Scotch, Irish. Includes Commission'd officers, Non-com. officers, etc.

2. It is assumed that "we've got the ships." The American navy, styled in the language of poetry (which in this case expresses more truth and poetry) "the phantom navy," consisted in 1879 of 28 cruising ships, 1 steamboat, and 5 sailing vessels. There were at the same time some other vessels under repair, making a total force (when fitted for service) of 47 steamers and 5 sail vessels. But a reduction of the naval force by act of Congress sent free to the waste, and the withdrawal of a number of the vessels from active service. Among the ships on the naval register are 24 iron-clad screw steamers, with a total armament of 72 guns. All other ships in the American navy are old wooden hulls, worthless for any purpose of naval warfare. The total number of commissioned officers and enlisted men in the American navy is below 8,296 men.

The English navy comprises no less than 236 ships of all classes. It includes about seventy heavily-armed ships of war, of which fifty are efficient for naval warfare. These are divided into five classes, according to thickness of armor, weight of armament, and tonnage. Of the six first-class iron-clads, two are above 10,000 tons, with a thickness of armor from 14 to 24 inches, and guns from 38 to 81 tons weight. The others are above 9,000 tons, with armor from 12 to 18 inches thick, and guns from 35 to 35 tons. Twelve of the third, fourth and fifth class are of lighter armor and guns, the latter, however, generally increasing in number. English iron-clads of the fifth, or lowest, class exceed in tonnage, strength of armament, and thickness of armor the best of American iron-clads. Against the 72 guns of the 24 American iron-clads the 50 English iron-clads in commission present 456 guns of the heaviest metal. Against the grand total of 8,000 men in the American navy, the English navy presents a grand total of 58,000 men. Another important difference between the English and the American navies which can not be expressed in arithmetical terms, is contained in the fact that the English navy is on the ocean, and the fact that the American navy is, for the most part, on paper.

3. It is said "we've got the money, too." A comparative statement of the resources of Britain and America, consisting in the accumulated wealth and capital of the two countries, would present a difference in favor of Britain no less remarkable than that which appears upon a comparison of the actual navy of Britain with the phantom navy of America. The data for such a comparison are not at hand, but the statement is one which will not be shown to be erroneous.

It is, then, tolerably safe to say that the assertion of American spreadeagleism (the transatlantic counterpart of British jingoism) is not supported by the facts. Of course, spreadeagleism may say, as probably it will, "so much the worse for the facts;" but that will not make the fact any the less stubborn. It will still be a warranted opinion, upon the facts, that America is not prepared, at all events not "now prepared, to maintain, in diplomacy and in fact, in peace and in war," the proposition of spreadeagleism that America "must control and protect alone any interoceanic channel across the isthmus." Before America will be prepared to maintain that proposition in fact and in war, America must convert a pretty large amount of American wealth into a naval armament. This is the statement of a very simple and plain fact. Americans ought to be, if they are not, a matter-of-fact people on subjects involving their own material interests. They ought not, then, to let their judgment upon the facts be obscured or vitiated by any sentimental declamation of spreadeagleism.

The S. F. Call's London correspondent says that Gladstone will easily carry the measure known as the Cloture case. This case is substantially a revision of rules which govern debate in Parliament. The new rules will enable a majority to do in some cases what a two-third vote was required to do under the present rules. The necessity of some change in the rules was discovered during the debate on the Land Act, when a minority held a majority powerless to act almost at its pleasure. It was at one time thought that the Government might fail to carry the measure, but Gladstone showed more power than was expected. The new rules give the party in power a great advantage over the opposition so long as it can command a bare majority.

ISMAIL PACHA once called together a Parliament. All the members bowed low when his Minister addressed them. It was explained to them that some of them must criticize the acts of his Highness, and then that the Minister would reply. But no one would "play" at being an Opposition, for they said that Ismail might banish them or bastinado them, in order to carry on the game. Eventually a few were induced to sit opposite the Minister, and to shake their heads when he spoke. The idea of an Egyptian assembly of notables in any way representing Egypt is ludicrous to all who know the country.

The eight great poets of the world—Homer, the father of Greek literature; Virgil, the prince of Latin elegance; Dante, the intense, passionate child of the Middle Ages; Goethe, the supreme worldling and poet of the complex modern world; Schiller, the pure, bright, ardent intelligence, who sang of liberty as his favorite theme; Shakespeare, the universal poet of humanity, the Jupiter in the heavens of the mind; Milton, the marvelous depicter of the unseen, and Byron, the volcanic poet of elemental passion.

It is announced to-day that a pool arrangement between the Union, Central, Southern and Texas Pacific and the Atchafalpa, Tepeck and Santa Fe Railroads has been completed, and that henceforth freight for the Pacific Coast will be sent by all these routes. It is also announced that an arrangement between the Pacific roads and the Pacific Mail Company has been signed, but the details are not made public.

The Philadelphia Press says that Gen. Meigs was the great spender of the public money. During the war he directed the expenditure of as much as $1,956,000,000, a sum by the side of which Vanderbilt seems like a pauper. He also audited a mass of war claims, allowing 33,000 that amounted to $40,000,000. But not a dollar stuck to the honest officer's hands.

secretion, it is found to contain mucus, and sometimes small particles of albumen, which appear, or color will be of a thin milky hue, and is often accompanied by a feeling of burning, or smarting, or a feeling of difficulty in passing the urine, which is often attended by a feeling of weight, or pressure in the bladder, and a feeling of irritation in the neck of the bladder, and in some cases, by a feeling of heat, or
