by petty sovereignties and wasted by petty warfare. We cannot calmly contemplate disunion. We know and love the blessings of the Union; but no human eye can penetrate the dark and terrible future that lies beyond the grave of the Constitution.

All through November the south wind poured steadily up through the Kyle, and filled Ronaldsday with mist and gloom. But in the first week in December, when the days were getting towards their shortest, the north wind came down, drove the mist away, and inveted the island with a cold, cruel, merciless beauty.

The Ballad of Boss Bagshaw.

Boss Bagshaw was a cobbler
Once livin at Bull's Head,
Where long he waxed stout and fat
As well as his shoe-thread,
And while he sowed not what he reaped,
He ripped what he had sowed;
And almost apostolic care
For wayward soles he showed.
The Boss a doctor never was,
Though often he did heal;
And kips and calls he did cut up
All for the public weal.
While he could neither write nor read,
The shoemakers were aware
That for the understandin' he
Did exercise a care.
No evil fortune small or great,
Could make his spirits fall;
He even sang right merrily
When once he lost his awl.
And even to his dyin' day,
Of Bagshaw he is told,
He never said a leaky boot,
Though such he oft half-sold.
The Boss a loyal tradesman was,
What hated rebel foes—
And frowned upon the "Copperheads,"
And scowled at secession toses.
Once he, from too much drink, was in
A state of lethargy,
When thieves made booty of his shoes,
And with them they did flee.
When he came to, says he, "If I
Get once upon my tracks,
For havin' stolen my stock
They'll get shoemaker's whacks."
That afternoon one thief he caught,
What quickly came to grief;
For loss he went from whittin' shoes
To whittin' of the thief.
The M. P.'s got another one,
A makin' out of town;
And when the thief was taken up
He seemed quite taken down.
Boss pled his trade for forty years,
Or somewhere thereabout;
For he, though long a puggin' in,
Was longer puggin' out.
But Bagshaw couldn't always live;
Like cobbler in the past,
He one day from his last did go
To come onto his last.

A "Respectable" Game of Poker.

It is said that the absconding and defaulting Treasurer of Sacramento destroyed his reputation and fortune by an indulgence in that vice which has ruined so many in this State—gambling. Bird, who was a poor player at best, acquired an irresistible passion for the game called poker. This game it seems, is played extensively in Sacramento by some of the most reputable and solid men of that place. It is one of those unobtrusive, quiet games, that can be played as well in a retired bed-chamber as in a spacious club-room; and a few hours' sitting is frequently sufficient to divest an unlucky wretch of the accumulation of years of frugality and toil. The most dangerous game of poker in Sacramento is one which is confined to a select circle of well known citizens. Not being professional players, they are not avidly, and it is considered quite a privilege to get a hand in it. But who to the man that enters it without being a first rate player.—He stands about as much chance of leaving it winner as a cat escaping Tartarus without claws. By this game the defaulting Treasurer fell, and the public funds were robbed. Bird, as we said, was a very indifferent player, and it is probable that, when he first was allured to it, he had no idea of becoming fascinated. But the game is played on a large scale, and bets on "full hands" frequently ranging as high as two or three thousand dollars at a pop. Possibly, Bird had the misfortune in his first sitting to hold "a full" against "fours," and lost a few thousand on the hand. It would not do to quit so much loser, and, like many others, he played to get even—resolving then to quit the game for good. But the oftener he indulged, the deeper he became involved, until at length he found the terms of his office on the point of expiring, with a deficit of $14,000 in his accounts. He had not the nerve to face the music, nor the courage to confess to his friends and to entreat them to save his honor, so he fled, leaving behind him, a heart-broken wife and several young children, all to participate in the ineffable disgrace which he had wrought upon himself and them.—This is only one of many instances of ruin at "respectable poker" in Sacramento. Hundreds of them over reach the public eye; but few of broken merchants, however, can trace their ruin to that "respectable game."—S. F. Call.

RIDING ASTRIDE.—Miss Harriet N. Austin, M. D., of Daucusville, New York, is decidedly in favor of ladies riding on horseback astride. In the Laws of Life for December, 1862, she says: "The position which women assume in riding is so unseemly, ungraceful, unhealthy and unnatural, as almost entirely to counteract the good effects that would otherwise be experienced. So great are the disadvantages attending to the style in which women have hitherto ridden, that the question has really come to be whether they shall ride as a man does, or not ride at all. If parents understood the value to women of good health, they would educate their daughters to ride with their sons, and in the same manner.—Then, in a few years, forty women would be seen riding where one is now seen, and humanity would greatly gain thereby."

WHO ARE THE HAPPY.—Lord Byron said: "The mechanics and the working men who can maintain their families, are, in my opinion, the happiest of men. Poverty is wretchedness, but even poverty is, perhaps, to be preferred to the heartless, unmeaning dissipation of the higher orders." Another author says: "I have no propensity to envy any one, least of all the rich and great; but if I were disposed to this weakness, the subject of my envy would be a healthy young man, in full possession of his strength and faculties, going forth in the morning to work for his wife and children, or bringing them home his wages at night."

POLITENESS.—Pat Doonan, at Inkerman bowed his head to a cannon ball which whizzed past, six inches above his bare skin. "Faith," says Pat, "one never loses anything by politeness."

CURRAN, when opposed to Lord Clare, said that he reminded him of a chimney-sweep, who had raised himself by dark and dusty ways and then called aloud to his neighbors to witness his dirty elevation.

MUOR gossip has been excited in the most select circles of London by the elopement of a young lady of rank with her music teacher. They took their notes (£5,000) with them.

"Why don't you give us a little Greek and Latin occasionally?" asked a country deacon of a new minister. "Why, do you understand those languages?" "No, but we pay for the best, and we ought to have it."

A young lady being asked by a female acquaintance whether she had any original poetry in her album, replied: "No, but some of my friends have favored me with some original spelling."

Envy, like a cold poison, benumbs and stupefies; and conscious of its own impotence, folds its arms in despair.

The Western Indians are growing quite civilized. They have lately taken to robbing the mails.

Mr. Beecher says there are many people who think that Sunday is a sponge with which to wipe out their sins.

How Tom Flinn was Acquitted.

An Arkansas advocate is defending his client, who is charged with stealing a hank of yarn: "Gentlemen of the jury, do you think my client, Thomas Flinn, of Muddy creek and Mississippi, would be guilty of stealin' a hank o' cotton yarn? Gentlemen of the jury, I reckon not—I s'pose not. By no means gentlemen—not at all. He is not guilty. Tom Flinn! Good heavens gentlemen—you all know Tom Flinn, and—on honor, now, gentlemen—do you think he'd do it? No, gentlemen—I s'pose not—I reckon not.—Thomas Flinn! Why great snakes and alligators! Tom's a whole tenn on Muddy creek and a hoss to let. And do you think he'd sneak off with a miserable hank o' cotton yarn? Well, gentlemen, I reckon not—I s'pose not. When the wolves was a howling, gentlemen, on the mountains o' Arkansas, and Napoleon was a fighting the battles of Europe—do you think my client, Thomas Flinn, gentlemen, could be guilty a bookin'—yes, bookin' gentlemen. I reckon not—I s'pose not. Tom Flinn! Gentlemen, I reckon I know my client, Thomas Flinn! He's got the fastest nag and purtiest sister, gentlemen, in all Muddy creek and Mississippi! That gentlemen are a fact.—Yes, gentlemen, that are a fact. You can bet on that, gentlemen. Yes, gentlemen, you kin bet your bones on that. Now 'pon honor, gentlemen, do you think he are guilty?—Gentlemen, I reckon not—I s'pose not.—Why, gentlemen of the jury, my client, Thomas Flinn, are no more guilty o' stealin' that are hank o' cotton yarn than a toad are got a tail!—yes, a tail, gentlemen!"

Verdict for the defendant.

ELOPEMENT EXTRAORDINARY.—On last Saturday, the worthy residents of Dayton were somewhat startled by an apparition which suddenly appeared in their midst, in the shape of a single horse, carrying a youth of sixteen years and a fair damsel about two years younger. Upon inquiry, it was found that they were lovers; and that their parents were unwilling they should be married, because they were so young, and that they, with a heroic desperation, had both got astride of a horse belonging to the young man, and had rode from the sink of Carson to Dayton, a distance of over fifty miles, determined to be united in the holy bonds of wedlock, as all true lovers should be. As soon as the facts of the case became known, several sympathizing persons conducted them to the office of Justice Ward, where they were speedily made man and wife, to their evident satisfaction and delight. As soon as the nuptial knot was tied, rejecting the kind solicitations of several ladies who offered them the hospitalities of their house, they mounted their solitary steed and wended their way back to their home, where they will no doubt find as much happiness among the sand hills and sage brush as if they dwelt in marble halls. Their names are W. D. Winfrey and Roxy D. Guthrie.—Virginia City Union.

AN ENEMY'S GIFT.—When the Crusaders, under King Richard, of England, defeated the Saracens, the Sultan seeing his troops fly, asked what was the number of the Christians who were making all this slaughter? He was told that it was only King Richard and his men, and that they were all aloft.

"Then," said the Sultan, "God forbid that such a noble fellow as King Richard should march on foot," and sent him a noble charger.

The messenger took it, and said: "Sir, the Sultan sends you this charger, in order that you may not be on foot." The king was cunning as his enemy, and ordered one of his squires to mount the horse, in order to try him. The squire did so; but the animal was fiery, and he could not hold him; he set off at full speed to the Sultan's pavilion. The Sultan expected he had got King Richard, and was not a little mortified to discover his mistake.

New instructions for the sale of the confiscated lands in South Carolina have been issued. Certain portions of the lands are to be reserved for school and benevolent purposes, and the balance will be sold at auction, the maximum price fixed being $1.25 per acre. Twenty-acre lots are to be laid out for the negroes to purchase, and the balance of the land will be divided into farms of not over 320 acres each. The town of Beaufort is to be sold according to the present divisions of the town property. These sales are to be made for cash, except to persons in the naval and military service, who are entitled to purchase, and who are to receive certificates upon paying a quarter of the purchase money, and the residue in three years, from the date of sale. There will be good chances for investment.
