Beulah Barton's Birthday.

By MARY KYLE DALLAS.

Old Mr. Spicer was taking his dinner in the little back room while his boy watched the shop.

"Meal times were sad affairs in those days. Ghosts were with them. He used to fancy that he heard Reuben run lightly down stairs and up to the very door of the room, and lift his head half expecting to see him enter and to discover that he had been dreaming a bad dream."

Today this had happened half a dozen times, when the lad put his head in at the door of the room.

"What is it, John?" asked the old man.

"Well, Mr. Spicer, there these Maryland peaches is goin' faster'n you'd like, that is."

"I suppose you're afraid to chase the boys away? You ain't got no more spunk than a hen," said old Spicer.

He arose, stalked through the back room and out upon the porch in haste, but there stood still. It was not a boy who was stealing peaches out of his baskets, but a soldier. Thin as a skeleton, his shoes like those of a tramp, everything he wore falling from him in rags, and the left sleeve of his wretched jacket pinned empty to his breast, he sat there eating peaches as coolly as if they belonged to him.

"Making free, you see," he said. "I couldn't help it if I was to be shot for it. You'd have to live on moldy crusts as I have, to know how these peaches taste to me."

"Help yourself," said old Spicer tremulously. "I'm glad to see any of the boys in blue for the sake of one I had that marched away and won't never march back again."

"You can't be sure of that," said the soldier, without looking up.

"Ah, he was killed," said Spicer.

"They reported me killed," said the soldier, taking another peach. "and all the while I was in a southern prison. I reckon I'd have died there, too, if it hadn't been that I remembered an old father I had that was fonder of me than I deserved, and would be glad to see what was left of me. There's a good deal in will power. I said I'd live, and I did."

"My God!" cried old Spicer. "I guess I'm goin' crazy at last! Let me look at you!"

"Dad," cried the soldier.

"Reuben," screamed the old man. "You're in too good to me, I've got you back in his arms. In the old familiar back room they had a long, long talk. Meanwhile customers rapped upon the counter in vain, and wondered what had become of Mr. Spicer.

"Heaven is too good to me, I've got you back in his arms, and the old man, wiping his eyes, left him and went into the store. Before the counter sat the tall, angular form of Mrs. Barton; at the door stood the basket phaeton, the black pony tied to the hitching post.

"I've waited quite a spell, Mr. Spicer," said the man, "but I've got my mind made out. Three pounds of almonds and four of eating raisins, fourteen pounds of sugar. Guess I'll take three baskets of your Maryland peaches."

How history was repeating itself. Mr. Spicer first felt that just this had happened before, then remembered when it was.

"You must be going to give a party," he gasped.

"My Beulah's birthday is the fifth, you know," said Mrs. Barton. "She's rebelled too long. I'm going to do my duty anyhow. I've made her get up and have a nice first since you know her."

She's out there. I guess she won't catch cold, all wrapped up in my brocade shawl."

"Your Beulah out there?" said the old man. "She's better then? She mustn't die. She must live, Mr. Spicer; your girl must live."

"Heaven is too good to me, I've got you back in his arms," said Mrs. Barton. "I mean she shall. But she don't take any interest. She just wants to die, I believe, to go where she kin make up with your Reuben. But, Lord willin', she shan't."

"She can make up with my Reuben without cryin' Mr. Spicer," said Mrs. Barton. "My Reuben has come back."

"O'gadiah Spicer! Don't tell me!" cried Mrs. Barton. "Come back! Your Reuben come back after all!"

Her voice, shrill and sharp by nature, rose higher than usual and carried far. Beulah, sitting wrapped in her shawl, heard every word and forgot that she was not able to walk. A moment more and she stood by her mother's side and caught her by the arm.

"Mother!" she cried. "Mother is it true?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Barton. "You can jest go in and talk with him while I read off my list to Mr. Spicer. I shall wait to hev this birthday party of yours a real proper good one, seein' Reuben's come hum."

For once Beulah did not find fault with her mother's Yansedom. "They'll have a lot to say to each other," she thought, "and I guess you and me kin afford time to sit down a spell and think over our blessings."

And there in that back room the talk was long and sweet; such talk as we might all have "if only the dead could know just when to come back and be forgiven."

Yet there were tears shed, too. Some for the knight of courtesy, who had unwittingly caused so much sorrow—poor, bright-eyed, gentle Du Bois, who lay sleeping under southern sod. And Beulah's birthday party! That was, I assure the reader, what her mother had declared it should be, "a proper good one."

CHAPTER I.

She turned away, her eyes instinctively seeking the window opposite.

It was just vanishing over the brow of the wavy "hills" they came clattering along the dusty road. Heaven! would the broomstraw hide his tall young form from their searching eyes? With her arms about her mother's waist Glen strained her own sight to watch him, while a sob rose in her throat. Maum Betsy, with her fat arms akimbo, stood at the corner of the house, alternately watching the disappearance of her oldest nurling and the rapid approach of a squad of cavalymen as they drew nearer and nearer in a cloud of dust.

"My Gawd! Miss Ma'y, it is do Yanks, 's' they's g'one, with her eyes starting from her head. "I dar to grabb, dey's a stoppin', and dar's dat boy Nelse hangin' on to de front gate 'n' talkin' to 'em, like as ef his black hide 'ud 'n' a bullet. Wish dey would pepper him out, anyhow. I'll give him Yankee Doodle when I gits hold of him again, 's' I do."

A new fear pierced the mother's heart. Were the soldiers about to enter this defenseless home? But no; after a brief consultation with Nelse the party wheeled across the road and entered a grove of live oaks just opposite the house.

Nelse hung on to the gate with outstretched neck and starting eyes until the last blue coat was out of sight, and then dropping off, sped like a bullet up the avenue and around the house into Maum Betsy's wrathful presence.

"Lawsd! 'n' pasted nimbly, dodging a cuff which she directed at his ear. "Is you seen dem Yanks, mammy?"

But before Maum Betsy's ire could burst forth, Glen left her mother's side and turned her stern young face inquiringly upon the boy.

"What did you tell those men, Nelse?" she asked.

"Lawsd! I ain't done tell 'em nuffin, Miss Glen. Hope I may die, ef I did. Dey up an' axed me who lived here, an' I tole 'em jes an' ole Miss, an' Missy—an' me an' mammy—since all dem yuther niggers done runned off."

Nelse writhed under her steady eye.

"Den dey tuk an' axed me war dere no gen'tlem 'bout de place, an' I tole 'em ole marster he done tuk an' did 'o' de wah—an'—an' dat was all."

"And you said nothing about your mother?"

"Lawsd, Miss Glen, I hope I may die, ef I did, 'n' his black body twistin' in emphatic denial. "You jes go an' ax 'em, ef you don't b'lieve me, you jes go an' ax 'em."

But Maum Betsy was no longer to be kept out of the conversation. "You look leah, niggers!" She had managed in the heat of the discussion to grasp the very Nelse by the shoulder and was pushing him before her to the kitchen doorway, near which they were standing.

"You jes lemme getch you hangin' on to de front gate again, profeckin' you kin yim!" An' if her mother's word out of your black mouth 'bout Mars Frank gittin' away'll skin you like a eel, boy. You beah me, don't you?"

As the pair disappeared Mrs. Helen lifted her anxious eyes to her daughter's face and saw that she was not as pale as she had been before.

"I am afraid he did, dear, but mother, don't give up so. They must have learned it sooner or later. They have made no move as yet to search for him, and he is out of their reach now, or soon will be. He knows every foot of these woods and hills, and there are plenty of doors open to him. He will not lack for food and shelter. Besides, we can still communicate with him, and they will surely not be stationed long in this out of the way place. What a messy he escapes these straggling bands of soldiers have committed through the country. Oh, if I had but been wise enough to have sent you away, and kept only Missy with me!"

"Now, mother, listen. I am not afraid of a whole regiment of Yanks, and what in the world would you have done without me? You must come right in now and have a cup of tea and lie down, and if Missy's nap is out I'll bring her down to keep you company while I watch the movements of the blue-coated gentry over in the grove as best I can. You see, Nelse, for he'll slip through Maum Betsy's fingers like an eel, sure enough."

But when her mother had been comfortably established on the sitting room sofa with Missy, warm and rosy from her afternoon nap, chattering happily beside her, Glen's lighthearted show of fearlessness forsook her. Her anxiety took the form of restless wanderings over the house, whose every window commanding a view of the grove opposite, drew her in turn like a magnet.

It was a fine old house of red brick, standing well back from the high road, surrounded by clustering trees and approached by an avenue of magnificent cedars; but the grounds were no longer trim and well kept, and the numerous outbuildings were dilapidated and vacant. An air of neglect and loneliness, enhanced by its remote situation from any town or village, hung about the place, and its interior corresponded but too well with this external desolation.

There had evidently been but few modern additions to the household belongings in late years. The furniture was still handsome, but old and massive, and the brilliant hues of the Turkey carpets and the rich curtains had faded to sober and neutral tints. The bare floors in some of the rooms were actually more cheerful, for they were wared and rubbed until they shone like mirrors, and when the fires were lighted in the open fireplaces the flames glistened upon shining oak and danced on the polished surface of old mahogany and multiplied themselves in the big brass andirons, that shone in rivalry of the brass candlesticks upon the high, old-fashioned mantels.

As Glen wandered restlessly from room to room, her home seemed to wear a new and unfamiliar aspect to her startled eyes. Suppose it should be invaded? It had always been so sure and peaceful a haven. Remote and secluded, only the rumors of war had disturbed its inmates, and the one member of the immediate family who had ever been called upon to yield to its demands had thus far been singularly preserved from danger. But its grim shadow had taken all the color out of the girl's life. All her opportunities had been sacrificed to it, every promise of her opening girlhood had been blighted by it.

"You were to have gone to school in Philadelphia, dear," her mother would say sometimes, passing her hand over Glen's fine head caressingly, "and then abroad, if it had not been for the war; your father and I had planned it all out. There is no hope of your coming out, or of our entertaining for you, as we would once have done. It would all have been so different if it had not been for the war."

Of course these were but minor considerations, and the girl unselfishly felt that to be such. Were there not always graver consequences to be lamented? Had not this insubstantial war snatched from them their all, whitened her mother's hair with untimely snow, and torn son and brother from their arms? And just before her, as she reached the hall, was a sadder evidence than these of its terrors.

The hall was a fine old entrance to a fine old house. Its oaken floor and rich wainscot gleamed in the evening light, and a curiously carved settle ran around three of its sides.

A few high backed chairs and one or two old tables with quaint spindle legs constituted its meager furniture, but its noble proportions and rich carvings redeemed it from bareness, and it was sweet with the pine cones and wild flowers of which Glen had yesterday rifled the woods. A bowl filled with early violets and pale primroses was placed directly beneath a portrait draped with the sad Confederate flag, and looking up at the boyish face above her with all the fiery tragedy of a hopeless self devotion written upon it, Glen read once more through a mist of tears the inscription beneath.

"Captain Helen, a brave soldier and a gallant commander, fell in leading a charge at the battle of Antietam, Sept. 17, 1862."

"This is the ballroom," she said, suddenly stopping before a double door leading to her father's study, a certain lighted candle high in one hand, up a winding stairway and along a wide hall, with Missy totting patiently in the rear. It was a strangely silent procession. His guide fitting on, with such quick, light footsteps before him, said nothing but a few words of explanation as they entered the misty, closed-up room. Her other but he was sufficiently occupied in noting the poise of her head, the turn of her rounded wrist, the scant, soft folds of the gown that clung to her young shape. It was of some faint gray stuff—a moth-eaten, faded fabric, which had been known to him and only ornamented with a cluster of carnations which Missy had fastened at her sister's throat a half hour ago. He thought he had never seen colors so artistically blended.

With the announcement of the O'Shea divorce proceedings Parnell's power was dissipated, and while he has been constantly struggling to regain his prestige his efforts have been signally futile.

THERE is another million dollar tin plate factory to be started in San Francisco, according to the republican Associated Press. These big bluffs have been made ever since the McKinley tariff robbery bill was introduced; but still there has been no sign of domestic tin, and the entire country has been compelled to pay an unwholesome tribute to keep up that party's campaign fol-de-rol.

SENATOR JOHN B. ALLEN has been interviewed and is quoted as follows: "I say frankly I am a candidate for re-election to the senate;" but adds, "I cannot say what I would do if a judgment were tendered me." The senator had better take the caged bird if he can get it, for it is not by any means certain that there will be a republican legislature, and if there is, it is bound to be an up-hill pull with so many republican knives unsheathed.

Will Give Employment to 1000 Men.

The Northern Pacific Coal Company has secured another coaling contract with the Union Pacific system, commencing October 1. The Union Pacific Company takes 600 tons, or about thirty cars daily, with the probability that the order will be doubled before November 1.

Fort Simcoe Notes.

Franklin P. Olney, one of Simcoe's Siwashes has been devoting himself to alfalfa this year and has so far made four cuttings. Now he is thinking of trying hops. Eneas, another leading Indian, has the largest crop and best varieties of apples, plums and peaches of anyone on the reservation. He says he is weary of paying exorbitant prices to merchants for dried fruit, and, in consequence, has dried about 400 pounds and has plenty of fruit yet to dry. Eneas is a great rustler.

A WATERMELON CANARD NAILED

A campaign is being made against Yakima through its watermelons. An itinerant Kentucky preacher has claimed that it was the original forbidden fruit in the Garden of Eden, and now jealous rivals are intimating that it is the basis of summer complaint and other illness to which flesh is heir. These declaimers know nothing of the fruit in its excellence, for if they did they would be most chary in uttering one word against it, even if they felt the most venomous of sectional prejudice. If there is harm in this fruit, it is in eating to excess or in an unripe or overripe state. All fresh fruit is cooling and purifying to the system and possesses medicinal qualities unknown to powder or pill. For fevers or diseases of the kidneys there is nothing better than the cool juice of a luscious watermelon. The entire fruit is wholesome. The dried seeds in winter make a tea that is most beneficial in its effects, and the juicy rind, if rubbed on the face, is said to possess a marvellously rejuvenating power on worn-out countenances.

THE NEW BISHOP.

Much more than ordinary interest attaches to the consecration ceremonies fixed for Oct. 14 in Boston of Phillips Brooks as bishop of Massachusetts. The new bishop's great fame and merit as a preacher, combined with his known liberality of views, has long attracted attention to him as one of the greatest divines in this country.

That such a man should reach so great a height of fame without making enemies or opponents was, of course, not to be expected. It was, therefore, not at all surprising that efforts were made by the school of theology in the church which was opposed to him looking to the prevention of his confirmation to this high office.

Happily for his opponents, because happily for his church, these efforts were doomed to failure. It is everywhere recognized that, while a bishopric cannot confer new honors upon Phillips Brooks, he can give greater dignity and import-

THE FIGHT FOR PURE FOOD.

Success of the Efforts to Scotch Bread Baking Powders.

The aggressive war waged by the Royal Baking Powder Company upon the hosts of adulterated and impure baking powders sold throughout the country is having a desirable effect. The scandalous attacks upon the Royal company by the manufacturers of the impure goods (which are made doubtless both from the spirit of revenge and in the hope of breaking effect of the damaging exposures) show that they are hit, while the official reports which have come from various public authorities fully corroborating the statements made by the Royal company, have awakened a wholesome public sentiment in favor of repressive laws, which means mischief to the illegitimate traffic.

The Royal Baking Powder Company set out some time ago to expose the character and to break up the sale of adulterated baking powders. Having found from an examination of many specimens that there was a large number of actually injurious powders in the market, they brought the matter before the public and denounced the makers by name in the press and to the health authorities. The affair was taken up by physicians, Board of Health, and Legislature throughout the country, chemists were employed to test the various powders in the markets, and the government itself directed analyses to be made before it would purchase the supplies needed for army, navy, and Indian use.

The result justified the charges made by the Royal company. Not only were the majority of baking powders in the market found to be largely adulterated, but many of them were ascertained to contain alum and other poisonous ingredients to such an extent as to render them positively unsafe for use in human food.

In making the charges the Royal Baking Powder Company did not hesitate to enter into competition with every other baking powder in the country, and it is a public satisfaction that in the official test by the government and state chemists and by Boards of Health, the Royal Baking Powder has been declared to be the superior to all others in strength, purity and wholesomeness, and absolutely free from all inferior or detrimental substances.

From recent official reports it is evident that the alum and otherwise impure goods have again come upon the market in dangerous quantities and their old enemy, the Royal, is again upon the war-path. In continuing its warfare against these goods the Royal is meeting with the old-time opposition and abuse. The public, however, will appreciate, as heretofore, both the object of the abuse and the action of the Royal company, and award full justice to the company that so fearlessly stands up for its protection from such adulterations.

AN IMPARTIAL BILL.

The Royal Baking Powder Condensed in the New York Legislature.

New York Press: Last Monday Mr. Kelly introduced the following bill in the assembly. A careful reading of it will show that it is a very important one.

An act to prevent the use of poisonous and injurious ingredients in baking powders:

WHEREAS, Baking Powders manufactured in this state, known as the "Royal" brand and other Baking Powders are advertised for sale as absolutely pure; and

WHEREAS, Official examination shows them to contain ammonia and other injurious ingredients; therefore the people of the state of New York, represented in senate and assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. Every can or package of baking powder containing ammonia offered for sale in this state shall have a conspicuous label thereon with the words "Contains Ammonia" printed thereon in plain type, not smaller than great primer and any person who shall sell, or have or offer for sale, any such can or package of baking powder without such label thereon, shall be guilty of misdemeanor.

SECTION 2. This act shall take effect July 1, 1911.

Trousers the Correct Thing for the Ladies. It is well understood by the advanced women of the period that trousers were woman's original dress.

Mrs. Emily Knight is a remarkable woman, who recently visited Yakima, but is now in the Gold Hill district looking after mining properties which she has bonded. Mrs. Knight hails from Tacoma, and claims to be an assayer and mining expert. She has bonded Tom Fife's Blue Bell mine for $50,000, and has also bonded nine other claims at smaller figures.

SEATTLE'S CITIZENS INTERESTED IN YAKIMA.

Yakima has completely captured Seattle. The citizens of the latter place are taken with our climate, our productions and our people, and they are acquiring all of the interest here possible. Within the past month, largely through the efforts of B. T. Carr and Howlett & Walker, eighteen prominent citizens of Seattle have taken claims here aggregating 5,280 acres and propose to put them under a complete state of cultivation.

A SUCCESSFUL COMEDY.

Local playgoers have a treat in store for them on Saturday night, when "Little Trixie" will receive its initial production at Mason's opera house. Wherever this attraction has been it has so popularized itself with the theatre goers and has done such a large business that return engagements are demanded by the managers of the theatres.

SENTENCING CRIMINALS.

Albert H. Wilbur, the man who stole the tickets from the railroad office, pleaded guilty to the charge of grand larceny and was sentenced to three years in the penitentiary. Michael Jordan received the same term for burglarizing the IXL store. The negro, Joseph Humphrey, was fined $300 and costs for assaulting the China restaurant keeper.

For the Housewife.

To remove grease stains from clothing, wash it out while fresh with alcohol. To clean willow furniture use salt and water. Apply with the nail brush and scrub thoroughly. Damp salt will remove the discoloration of cups and saucers by tea and careless washing. A strong solution of alum, to which has been added a little glycerine and vinegar, is a cure for mosquito bites. To keep nickel silver ornaments and mounts bright rub them with woolen cloths that have been saturated in spirits of ammonia. Salt as a tooth powder is better than almost anything else that can be bought. It keeps the teeth brilliantly white, and the gums hard and rosy. As a useful and simple ointment for sunburn, nothing has been found better than rose water and glycerine. Three parts of rose water to one of glycerine.

The North Yakima Flouring Mill

is receiving a fresh coat of paint and is to be lighted by electricity. Twenty incandescent lamps will be required for this purpose.

Alfred M. Miller, whose long residence and activity have made him one of the best known citizens of Yakima county, was married on Thursday, Oct. 8, to Ida D. Austin.

Mr. Ed Pike, of Hot Springs, was married on Saturday last by Justice Gardner to his cousin, Miss Jennie Gerrard. The ceremony was performed at the Guild house.

Capt. J. T. Simmons, while out on a prospecting tour recently, killed a porcupine, and now he is engaged in presenting his friends with quills from the "fretful" animal.

The northern diver, after pining for the freedom of the waters of the Hudson bay, finally passed in his checks and is now in the hands of a Tacoma taxidermist for mounting.

Mr. Henderson, of the Wenas, has located a very promising mining claim on the west side of the Cascades, just beyond Tom Fife's Blue Bell, which vein it is supposed to tap.

The price of hops is steadily raising and 12 1/2 cents is now freely offered, but growers are not disposed to part with their holdings at this figure and express much confidence in securing good prices.

The name of M. G. Wills was unintentionally omitted from the list of bear hunters last week. Mr. Wills failed to kill anything, but he presided with great dignity at the subsequent coon banquet.

The Yakima Speed Association is arranging for holding the fall meeting on the Gilson track Oct. 23 and 24. The program of the races is now being arranged and will be published next week, together with the purses offered.

The HERALD was in error when it stated that Crippen, Lawrence & Co. had moved into the First National bank building. This firm still occupies its pleasant quarters in the Syndicate block and has no intention of making any change.

It is said that J. T. McDonald, of Ellensburg, is about to sell his mine, the John Arthur, located near Ruby City, Okanogan county, for $100,000. The genial Scotchman's many friends will rejoice with him in his good fortune.

C. M. Hauser, a well known and popular citizen, has opened the Crescent bakery in the building formerly occupied by Vance & Mulford. The attention of the public is called to Mr. Hauser's advertisement in this issue of THE HERALD.

The Puget Sound Presbytery held its session in this city on Tuesday and Wednesday. The attendance was very good and the exercises interesting. Reverends McCarty and Head, former pastors of the Presbyterian church here, were among those who were present.

Kittitas Localities: Yakima county is fast becoming noted for its fine yield and increased acreage of crops. Several citizens of North Yakima have grown rich from hop culture. Puyallup will have to look out, as Yakima county bids fair to strip her of her laurels as the greatest hop raising district in the state.

The city election will be held on Monday next to fill the vacancies created by the resignation of R. K. Nichols as mayor and H. L. Tucker as councilman. Two tickets have been nominated, one with Alfred B. Weed for mayor and David Guillard for councilman, and the other with Wm. Lee, Sr., for mayor and Michael Schorn for councilman.

The comedy sensation, "Little Trixie," which has created a furore in all eastern cities, is making its first western tour, and will appear at Mason's opera house on Saturday evening. The company is said to be the strongest of its kind traveling, and as this alone assures a not only splendid but also funny performance, it would be well for patrons of stage amusements to avail themselves of this opportunity of seeing this successful and popular comedy. It introduces many new and novel features and is replete with everything that is essential to the best of entertainments.

WEEK FACTS ABOUT OATHS.

How People Swear and Where the Oath Words Came From.

"You need not have looked severe because I said that I didn't care a damn," said a gruff old senator in conversation with the Sunday school reporter of the Washington Star. "That is not swearing. The expression has a very different meaning from what is popularly supposed, and was originated by the Duke of Wellington. A dam in India is the smallest piece of money known, and not to care that much means simply that one is very indifferent. That was all the phrase was intended to signify. The word 'damna' from the Latin verb meaning to condemn, is a very different thing. Curiously enough, it seems almost invariably to be the first word in our language acquired by foreigners, and it has always been such a favorite with the English that in the last century the French always referred to them as the 'God-damns.' A distinguished Gallic writer of that epoch said that English was a beautiful tongue and that 'God-dam' was the basis of it. 'People of that nation,' he remarked, 'have a few other words which they use in conversation, but the principal one is Goddam. You can go anywhere in England if you know that.'

"A funny misapprehension also exists as to the expression, 'Go to the deuce.' People generally suppose that 'deuce' means 'devil,' whereas as a matter of fact it is derived directly from the Latin 'Deus'—'God.' So, when any one tells you to go to the deuce, he is unconsciously uttering the best of good wishes for your welfare.

"Speaking of Latin reminds me that among the ancient Romans it was considered the thing for each man to have some particular god to habitually swear by. Some swore by Jupiter, others by Mars, others still by Hercules, and so on. The demigods, like Minerva, and Castor and Pollux, were also made use of in the way of oaths. Castor and Pollux were usually appealed to as the 'Twins'—'By Gemini'—the phrase whence we get our exclamation, 'By Jiminy.' It was thought very improper for Roman ladies to swear by the male gods, but they were permitted to take the names of the Twins in vain, and also especially that of Venus. In moments of great aggravation they might go so far as to cry 'Mecaster!'—'By Castor!' The Greeks swore by the cabbage, which was the most prized vegetable, and even to this day the same oath is often heard in Italy, while in France a lover is being intensely affectionate when he calls the lady of his heart his 'petit chou' or 'little cabbage.' 'By Jiminy' is from 'Jinco,' the Basque name for God. Barbarous tribes have been accustomed to swear by the head of their ruler. Queen Elizabeth is said to have been a very hard swearer, as ladies were very apt to be in her day. Louis IX. of France forbade the use of his courtiers' such oaths as 'Par Dieu,' 'Cordieu,' 'Teddieu,' and so on. There chanced to belong to one of the ladies of the court a small pet dog named 'Bieu.' The courtiers made up their minds to swear by the dog instead of by the Deity, and hence came the parbious and colorful of later times. Pythagoras had a favorite oath which most people would consider not sufficiently forcible to be satisfactory. He swore by the number four, which the Greeks regarded as symbolizing perfection."

MORE MONEY COMING.

Hospital Outlook for Northwestern Railroad Building—Foreign Capital for the Coast.

Oregonians: There seems to be a hopeful feeling among local railroad men as to a relieved condition of the money market here. Eastern advices are understood to be indicating that foreign capital will soon enlist itself freely in American railroad securities, thus affording large sums of money to be expended for a twelve-month.

In addition to this, the heavy crops of Oregon and Washington are now moving in great volume, and money is already pouring in for disbursement. The producers are thus expected to set in motion a succession of debt payments, which will relieve one creditor after another, and allow a surplus for building and developing.

Among the railroad enterprises that were interrupted by the financial stringency of a year ago may be mentioned: The Union Pacific from Portland to Seattle.

The Northern and Hunt Gray's Harbor and Willapa systems.

The Northern's line from Chehalis to North Yakima.

The Southern's extension from Junction to Corvallis.

The Oregonian's extension from Silverton into Portland.

Other proposed enterprises, which a plentifulness of foreign capital would direct attention to, would be the many Astoria projections; a Roseburg connection with Coos bay, now begun from the coast, but laboring under disadvantages; several minor branches contemplated by the Oregonian West Side road; an extension of the Madison-street road to the eastward; a belt line around the East Side peninsula; a route from Eugene to Florence, and the Northern's northward route to Victoria.

On the suspended enterprises much work had been done. The Union Pacific had incurred an indebtedness on its extension when work stopped December 9, 1890, of no less than $1,500,000. The Oregonian's line into Portland from Silverton had proceeded as far as securing right-of-way. The Northern has already put enough money into South Bend and vicinity to guarantee the completion of all its plans there. Its road from North Yakima to Chehalis has been surveyed and definitely decided on. The Southern had already let the contract for its ties between Junction and Corvallis, and the score of another winter's flood will probably emphasize sufficiently the need of another route from the upper valley into Portland.

Of all the coast enterprises, the Great Northern alone has pushed steadily forward across the Rockies, until now it is only within a few days of having a quick, all-rail connection into Seattle by the Canadian Pacific.

BREAD OUT OF SAWDUST.

Scientists Now at Work on the Problem and May Solve It.

Washington Star: A Star reporter was informed that the department of agriculture is interested in a plan for making bread out of sawdust.

Aburd? By no means. Scientists believe that there is no good reason why the thing should not be entirely practicable. Everybody knows that starch is a substance extremely nutritious; in fact, it is nearly all nutrient. Well, starch and sawdust are the same thing. Sawdust, which is "cellulose," is of precisely the same chemical composition as starch. The two are expressed by the same chemical formula—C7 H 10 O5—that is, six parts of carbon, ten of hydrogen and five parts of oxygen. These are the simple ingredients of either starch or sawdust. Scientific experiments have been trying for a long time to find out a way to transform the one into the other. If they should succeed the discovery would be way a head of the philosopher's stone in point of value. An inexhaustible source of food supply would at once be rendered available in the forests, the grass and even in straw and chaff.

Hitherto chemistry has occupied itself almost wholly with taking things apart, in order to find out what they are made of; but now the science is directing its attention to putting elements together for the production of useful substances. Already it has succeeded in the artificial preparation of indigo, alizarin, aric acid and many other compounds. The aniline colors, obtained from coal tar and yet rivaling the most brilliant tints of the rainbow, are similarly produced. So complex are some of them that their names, which give full account of their composition, have to be regular seven-league words, one beautiful dye being known as "Hexamethylmethoxytriarylamidodiphenylcarbolol." From coal tar in like manner are derived many valuable anti-fever medicines and sperines.

The prospects of this new science of putting elements together seem infinite and the era of bliss may yet dawn which has been prophesied by the illustrious naturalist Frederick Cook, who says that all struggles for existence among men arising from want of food will be done away with when chemistry shall have learned to make starch from carboic acid and water. Plants grow by doing just that, and it may, therefore, be said that farmers have been engaged since time immemorial in this very chemical industry. It would scarcely be so surprising, then, if the farms of the country should be replaced at some time in the future by chemical laboratories.

NEKIDE BY AMMONIA.

The Terrible Agony Does Not Prevent Its Use.

No poison brings death with more maddening agony than ammonia, but that fact does not seem to discourage the suicide. The man Harowitz, who deliberately swallowed a fatal dose of the drug in New York recently, is only one of the many who have gone the ammonia route to death in spite of the excruciating pain. Dr. Blythe has recorded thirty cases of ammonia poisoning in the small London district of which he is health officer; Professor Mitchell mentions twenty-two cases, and four have occurred during the short time Dr. Jenkins has been connected with the coroner's office in New York. Cases of slow poisoning from ammonia are of constant occurrence among men who work in its manufacture, or even in decomposing substances which give it off in considerable quantities. Ammonia, slowly and from day to day taken into the system, causes the complexion to lose its freshness, and the skin of men who get heavily impregnated with it has a disagreeable blotched and discolored appearance.

Taken into the stomach from day to day in even the small quantities used to adulterate food, such as baking powder, it not only injures the complexion but attacks the lining of the stomach, and is the source of much general ill health.

The recent rapid increase in the use of ammonia for various purposes, and the consequent increase in its manufacture, have made it one of the most easily obtained poisons and, although everybody is familiar with it in some form, there is a surprising amount of ignorance of its dangerous qualities.

Its use as an adulterant in any food preparation is simply a crime, and as a crime should be punished.

A Sure Cure For Piles.

A FIGHT FOR LIFE.

Shall We Drive Slow Poisons From Our Bread?—Alum and Ammonia in Our Bread.

A nuisance that troubled England fifty years ago is now rapidly spreading in this country, that is putting alum in the bread we eat. This question is causing a great deal of discussion at the present moment, as it is revealed that alum is being used as a substitute for cream of tartar in baking powders. A story is told that a very large percentage of the baking powders sold on the market contain either alum or ammonia, and many of them contain both these pernicious drugs. Much timely alarm is felt at the wholesale use of alum in bread, biscuits and pastries. To young children, growing girls, persons of weakly frame, alum bread eaten morning, noon and evening is the most harmful. It is the small quantities taken at every meal that do the mischief. Alum is cheap, costing but two or three cents a pound, while cream of tartar costs thirty cents, and the high price of cream of tartar has led cheap baking powders to be made of alum. If the reader wants to know something of the corrosive qualities of alum let him touch a piece to his tongue then reflect how it acts on the tender delicate coats of the stomach.

Following is a list compiled by the Scientific American of the alum and ammonia baking powders that have already been tested:

- Atlantic & Pacific, Royal, Cook's Favorite, Scioto, Silver Spoon, Silver Star, Crystal, Snowdrip, Snowdrip, Sovereign, Dry Yeast, Gem, Globe, Standard, Sunflower, Pearson's, Washington, Windsor, Peerless, Zipp's Grape, Purity.

There are, in addition to the foregoing list from the Scientific American, a number of such powders sold in the western that were not found in the eastern states.

Following is the list to date:

- Calumet, Contains Alum (Calumet Baking Powder Co., Chicago.) Forest City, Contains Ammonia Alum (Vowles Bros., Cleveland.) Chicago Yeast, Contains Ammonia Alum (Chapman & Smith Co., Chicago.) Ben Bon, Contains Ammonia Alum (J. C. Grant Baking Powder Co., Chicago.) Unvaried, Contains Alum (Sprague, Warner & Griswold, Chicago.) One Spoon, Taylor's, Ammonia Alum (Taylor Mfg. Co., St. Louis.) Yarnall's, Contains Alum (Yarnall Mfg. Co., St. Louis.) Shaw's Snow Puff, Contains Alum (Merchants' Mfg. Association, St. Louis.) Dodson & Hill, Contains Alum (Dodson & Hill, St. Louis.) Shepley's, Contains Alum (Wm. H. Shepley, St. Louis.) Bain's, Contains Alum (Meyer-Bain Mfg. Co., St. Louis.) Monarch, Contains Ammonia Alum (E. H. Murdoch & Co., Chicago.) Snow Ball, Contains Alum (Bengal Coffee & Spice Mills, Chicago.) Giant, Contains Alum (W. F. McLaughlin & Co., Chicago.) Echo, Contains Alum (Spencer Bluing Paddle Co., Chicago.) Kaldwell's Purity, Contains Alum (Kaldwell Mfg. Co., Chicago.) Rising Sun, Contains Ammonia (Phoenix Chemical Works, Chicago.) White Rose, Contains Ammonia Alum (Globe Coffee & Spice Mills, Minneapolis.) Wood's Acme, Contains Ammonia (Thos. Wood & Co., Philadelphia.) Andrews' Pearl, Contains Ammonia (C. E. Andrews & Co., Milwaukee.) Harrier's Favorite, Contains Alum (H. H. Harrier, Minneapolis.) Fidelity, Contains Alum (Sherman Bros., Chicago.) Putnam's Best, Contains Alum (Wells Putnam & Co., Chicago.) China "T" House, Contains Alum (Nash McDowell, St. Paul, Minn.) Twin City, Contains Alum (J. K. Ferguson, Minneapolis, Minn.) Hercules, Contains Ammonia (Hercules Dak's Powder Co., San Francisco.) Climax, Contains Ammonia (Climax Baking Powder Co., Indianapolis.) Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is reported by all authorities as free from Ammonia, Alum, Lime or any other adulterant. In fact, the purity of this ideal powder has never been questioned.

Mother!

Remember that Castoria does not contain Morphine, Opium, or any other narcotic substance, in any quantity, shape or form. It is entirely vegetable, pleasant to take, positively effective, and perfectly harmless. It is not a secret remedy; the formula is printed on the wrapper. Your physician will recommend it. Paragoric, Balsaman's Drops and many so-called Soothing Syrup or Morphine, in any quantity they stipply, and in large quantities are deadly poisons. Castoria assimilates the food and regulates the bowels, cures diarrhoea, allays feverishness and fretfulness, soothes the pain in teething, relieves constipation and kills worms. It brings refreshing and natural sleep to the child and gives rest to the mother. "Castoria is so well adapted to infants and children, that I recommend it as superior to any other known remedy."

Dr. H. A. Archer, 111 S. Oxford St. Brooklyn, N. Y., March 8, 1887.

"Your personal knowledge and observation I can say that Castoria is an excellent medicine for children, acting as a laxative and relieving the pent up bowels and general system very much. Many mothers have told me of its excellent effect upon their children."
