THE SHEEP TURNED LION.

Of the forty boys who boarded at Mr. Jawe's house in Eton, there was not a milder youth than Simpkins, who reached the light of Upper Division of the Fifth Form without distinguishing himself in any way. He was a tall, six-foot, hairied lad, with long arms and legs, and an amiable but weak smile. He did nothing well, and yet nothing so ill as to attract remark. His place in "trials," or school examinations was always low, but he had never "muffed," and as it was with him in school work, so was it in games, for he did not excel at cricket, football or rowing. He could just swim; pull without catching crabs; but without knocking down his stumps (though he was incapable of scoring), and at football he could play without appearing to "funk," though in truth he had respect for his shins, and would never willingly charge into a "bully," where there were a good many loose kicks lying about. So, in sum, poor Simpkins was a duffer; but, on the other hand, he possessed such an exuberant imagination that he scotely felt the degradation in which he stood in reason of his general inferiorities. A physiognomist studying his countenance would have seen in it the signs of budding genius, and might have prophesied that Simpkins would become a poet, a novelist, or a wit. Meanwhile, the lad's imagination served chiefly for his self-glorification in private, for he was constantly picturing for his own delectation scenes in which he played the part of a hero. As he was captain of the Eleven, and made such a score at Lord's as to win a victory against Harrow of his own hat, now he was captain of the boats and "stroked" the Eight at Henley, winning for his school the Grand Challenge Cup and the Ladies' Plate; or, again, Simpkins fancied himself plunging into competition for the Newcastle scholarship, and defeating all his rivals, as a preliminary to going up to Oxford and gaining double first-class honors. There was not a vision of fact that Simpkins did not conjure up; and the worst of it was that these dreams haunted him by night as well as by day, so that now and then he would arise from bed deeply mortified at facing the realities of his humble position, and making the most valiant resolves that he would try and do better for the future.

It should be mentioned that Simpkins had his one point of superiority over most fellows in the school; he was a great authority on postage stamps. He had amassed a collection of nearly 3000 different sorts, and used to make himself pleasant during the holidays by taking it to young ladies. At Eton he was sometimes consulted by lower boys as to the genuineness of stamps which they had sought for their own collections; and occasionally Masters would joke with him about his supposed infallibility in relation to geography, and the dates when divers sovereigns had ascended the throne. As a matter of fact, Simpkins was not infallible; but he passed for being so, which is not the same thing, as His Holiness the Pope would say. Thus, one evening at the beginning of a Michaelmas Term or Football Half, Simpkins, returning from the holidays, was treated by his tutor with an invitation to come to tea, and exhibit his collection of stamps to a young lady who was a connoisseur.

"It's a sister of my wife's," said Mr. Jawe; "she's quite as eager about stamps as you are; so you must mind and not let her coax any out of your collection. I warn you she is most clever in her hobby."

"Both the stamps," solicited Simpkins, who, like all hobblerheads, thought it a proof of manliness to affect being ored by female society; but he went and put on his white tie, and presently made his appearance in the drawing-room with a folio album under his arm.

He was warmly received by Miss Nellie Snubbin, his tutor's sister-in-law, who was a merry maid of seventeen. Her enthusiasm about stamps may have been great, but it soon exhausted itself in conversation; for, after tea, when Simpkins and she sat down in a corner, she put on the air of having a good look at the album she began to talk about everything except stamps.

"How long have you been at Eton, Mr. Simpkins?"

"About five years, I think."

"Been often swished?"

"Yes," observed Simpkins, still offended, "and there are about nine hundred of them in the school."

"Nine hundred eleven, do you mean? Oh, you are talking of fellows. Why don't you have the sense to call yourself boys? We at our school need to call ourselves girls; but I suppose you go in for grand expression at Eton. I say, Mr. Simpkins, are you conceited?"

"What should I be conceited about?"

without condescending to meet her glance. On Sunday, in chapel, he encountered her eyes once, and she smothered a smile in her muff, which made him feel hot all over and dry in the mouth. Simpkins had just reached the age of 17, when the youth began to attach importance to the sayings of maidens, and perhaps, in truth he was going to be a hero for the sake of Miss Snubbin, whom he loathed.

The season was autumn, and every day "after twelve"—i. e. between noon and two, the boys of the different houses went to play football—Simpkins excoriated these games, which, so far as he was concerned, consisted of idly running about during an hour after a ball that he seldom touched. He used to play for the propriety of the thing, just to set an example to the Lower Boys, but he had never been known to make a goal or a rouge except by flukes.

Now, a day or two after, Miss Snubbin had laughed at him in the chapel. Simpkins retired in a dannel shirt and a pair of trousers, and, just to set an example to the Lower Boys, but he had never been known to make a goal or a rouge except by flukes.

At ordinary times Simpkins would have been the last fellow to respond to the challenge, but, suddenly he was seized with the idea that he wished to annihilate it. He kicked it too far for "bullying," and though he followed it up as fast as he could run, he was not in time to prevent Bullonley, who was "hying-man" on the other side from giving it a drop kick on the board. But Simpkins, without checking his pace, gave a leap, stopped the ball with his hands, and when it had fallen to the earth, made such a mad rush at Bullonley that this worship who no more expected the kick than an ox does an assault from a sheep—was carried clean off his legs, and measured his length on the sward. He scrambled up discomfited, but was too late to save the goal. Simpkins, scurrying along like a runaway cock, had dodged the two "behinds," and bullied the ball clean through the sticks.

"Well played, Simpkins," cheered the astonished players on both sides in a chorus; and a tinkling laugh added its melody to their shouts like a bell in an orchestra.

The laugh came from Miss Nellie Snubbin. She it was who, arriving on the ground with her sister in the midst of the game, had abruptly fired the soul of Simpkins with martial ardor, and turned the tide of the play. But Bullonley had seen Miss Snubbin, too, and he felt mortified at having been rolled on the grass under her eyes. He resolved that there should be no repetition of this disgrace; and after the "kick-off," he started in pursuit of the ball like a hung lion let loose. He ran so fast, however, that Miss Snubbin, too, and he got bullied back by some other fellows (for play had freshened now all over the field), right back to his rouge line. Bullonley turned, saw that Simpkins had got the ball, and bore down upon him. This time was poor Simpkins that bit the dust; but it so happened that he fell behind the line with the ball under him, and touching it he claimed a rouge.

Bullonley was furious. A "bully" was formed outside the goal, and he went down "post" the ball between the brunt of the fray, and to check further enterprises on the part of Simpkins. Now, in an Eton bully it is the "post" who holds the ball between his feet, supported by all the players on his side; but those on the other endeavor by main force to "rouge" the ball between the goal-sticks. A strong, cool-tempered post trusts to his own strength to force the ball out of the bully and to pass it on to one of his "comers," who will kick far ahead; but a hot-tempered "post" kicks, and that what Bullonley proceeded to do. He kicked the ball fiercely two or three times on the shins, and made this poor youth wince and tremble all over from pain; but Simpkins had the courage to stick to his ball with this result—that Bullonley succumbed to a sudden rush, and fell made while one of his feet was raised, and bringing down all his own side to his collapse, was the cause of another goal being scored.

This made two goals to Simpkins, who was uproariously cheered, but now a new feat happened, for when the "bully" had disappeared, Simpkins, livid with pain and excitement, strode up to Bullonley and said:

"You shinned me several times over just now, Bullonley. Did you do it on purpose?"

"What if I did?" asked the other, amazed as a mastiff might be at getting called to book by an Italian greyhound.

"Well, if you did, you're a cad," answered Simpkins. "Take that!" and he dealt Bullonley a wild right hander on the nose.

"Confound you!" roared Bullonley and he struck out at his assailant with both fists; but already blood was gushing from his face, and some had got into his eyes and was blinding him.

Simpkins took desperate advantage of this to administer three "slashers" in succession, one on each eye and a third on the broad basket.

The unfortunate Bullonley staggered like a drunken man, and from that time Simpkins had him at his mercy. But "mercy" is an inappropriate term, for a sheep who by chance can work his wicked will on an ox is not merciful; and Simpkins had now to wipe up by one resolute display of savageness, five years of utter lameness.

His school-fellows stared at him in consternation, but at the same time cheered with frenzy, as if the weak beast the strong. It was like a revolution in which some paltry workman beards the king, and no one thought of stopping the fight. Bullonley found not a friend, and the punishment he got during a couple of helpless minutes was awful. Down he fell at length, all in a lump, stunned and sick, and then Mr. Jawe and her sister, breaking into the ring called upon Simpkins, in trembling accents to desist. Simpkins had reaped but a single black eye in the encounter, and he looked fairly fresh. Touching his cap to the ladies, he said coolly to some lower boys: "Take that fellow to Tutors, some of you; and now we'll go on with the game."

But saying this, he did not vouchsafe a single glance to Miss Snubbin. Of course, during the rest of the game nonplussed Simpkins, and he made as many goals as he pleased. Success often comes to the confident, and Simpkins, having once got knowledge of his strength, was able to give full scope to his ambition. He got into the school football eleven that half, and in the next summer half became one of the eight, and rowed at Henley. Miss Snubbin met him as he alighted from his boat, which had won the Ladies' Plate.

"Well done, Mr. Simpkins," she cried, clapping her hands.

"Well done, Miss Snubbin," he answered, in a whisper. "I think I owe a good deal of this to you, don't I?"

And when their glances met this time, it was the girl who blushed.

REDLICH, HECHT & CO.

A New Firm with unexcelled Facilities for Meeting the Trade.

Hecht Bros. & Co., of San Francisco have opened a branch establishment in Portland, where they will supply the trade with the best made boot and shoe in the market. Mr. S. Redlich, formerly with L. Goldsmith & Co., will assume the management of the branch here, and that in itself is a sufficient guarantee of the future success of the house. The new firm will sell goods at the same prices as does the San Francisco house. A great advantage is offered by this house, and one that will be appreciated is the fact that when dealers desire a case or more of any desired size they can be accommodated. Heretofore cases invariably contained varied sizes, and a buyer was too often compelled to purchase what proved dead stock in order to obtain the sizes desired. Dealers were in consequence compelled to carry the sizes for which they had little or no call, although it had to be done in order to supply saleable sizes. The new system introduced by Mr. Redlich, will entirely do away with this and the dealer can purchase just what is needed for his trade and not be compelled to carry un-called for stock. This also has been a great reason for giving up the drummers for San Francisco houses who took orders for special sizes although stocks here were first class and could be bought to advantage, yet the fact of not being able to secure just the sizes desired, operated against trade with this city, and lost to its merchants considerable business. Interior merchants will welcome this accommodation and doubtless show a just appreciation for the efforts of the new house to meet their wants. All goods kept by the firm are to be packed in this manner. To show samples to advantage the firm have had constructed for them a large and well equipped warehouse in Warehouse No. 10, Investment made on Commission, and special attention given to the negotiation of first-class loans of cities, counties and other corporations.

We buy and sell Bills of Exchange on the principal cities in the United States, ENGLAND, FRANCE, GERMANY, AUSTRIA, ITALY, SWITZERLAND, CANTON, and all other principal cities of the world. Collections made and prompt returns rendered at market rates of exchange. We also handle transfers made with New York, Boston, Chicago, and the principal cities of the U. S. and also transfers made with London, Paris and Lyons. Letters of Credit and Commercial Credits issued on the principal cities of the United States and Europe. Loans made on good Collaterals or approved Securities. Telegraphic Transfers made in all parts of the world. Deposits received, subject to Check on Demand. National, State, City and County Bonds and Warrants, and other Securities, bought and sold.

We respectfully call attention to our facilities for the every business connected with Banking Business. Yours, very respectfully, R. H. McDONALD, President.

"BOSS OF THE ROAD" OVERALLS IMPROVED.

The unparalleled popularity of the "Boss of the Road" Overall has induced several manufacturers to imitate them with an inferior class of work.

To protect our customers from such imposition; to place an Overall on the market which shall SURPASS all others in strength, while as elegant in cut as the most fastidious could desire, and, above all, to furnish an article AS CHEAP AS THE CHEAPEST, we determined to improve them by the addition of our PATENTED CONTINUOUS FLY. Heretofore only used in Standard make of Overalls. With this valuable improvement we guarantee our "Boss of the Road" Overall as the BEST and MOST SERVICEABLE ARTICLE, at the price, to be had in the United States.

Manufacturers and Dealers are specially cautioned against infringement on letters patent covering the Continuous Fly.

YOUNG MEN

WHO MAY BE SUFFERING FROM THE effects of youthful excesses, or indigestion, will do well to avail themselves of this. The treatment, SPINNEY will guarantee to afford relief for every case of chronic disease of the system in any form of character which he undertakes and fails to cure.

MIDDLEAGED MEN. There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits aropy sediment will often be found, and sometimes small particles of albumen will appear in the urine. It is a sign of a diseased condition of the system, and should be treated at once. SPINNEY will guarantee to afford relief for every case of chronic disease of the system in any form of character which he undertakes and fails to cure.
