One of the Washington Sunday newspapers has declared that Gideon's skull was found in the Medical Museum before the skeleton had been mounted, and that another skull had been put in its place.

Judge Thayer of Philadelphia has decided that the act of a ticketless passenger engaging in worldly employment on Sunday, is valid. The point was raised by a number of his clerks, and he decided for the shavers customers on Sunday.

The registration in Brooklyn on one day of the past week was 42,495 against 39,925 for the same day in 1881. For the first two days it is 71,751. The first day's registration in New York shows a total of 55,222, against 53,970 last year and 72,588 in 1880.

The New York police was unusually vigilant in enforcing the provisions of the Excise law on Saturday last, and as a result many drinking places which have been usually in full operation on Sunday, were closed up. A large number of arrests for violation of the law were made.

The veteran editor Thurlow Weed is in the city, but is slowly sinking to his grave, though momentarily here and there better. His great age is against him, and the improvement of his health is very slow. His eyes say the worst must be looked for in the very near future.

At New Orleans, work on the levees and levees has drawn off so many that steamboat men are paying $75 per month for deck hands, and have great difficulty in securing them. Complaints are also made of scarcity of labor on river plantations.

The New York Tribune's Washington special says: "Folger's resignation as a member of the Cabinet is likely to be referred to the President at the Cabinet meeting to be held in New York, at the President's house in Lexington avenue, prior to the departure of the Cabinet for Boston."

The Secretary of the Interior has ordered the Commissioner of the General Land Office to suspend action in the survey of the Rancho Corte de Madera del Presidio until otherwise advised. The survey, which is now being executed, is understood to exclude Peninsula Island, to which objection has been made.

His Pasha still refuses to allow the English consul to defend Arabi Pasha. Sir Edward Mallet fully advocates the employment of a British consul to defend Arabi Pasha, and contends that delay in granting the application for counsel will seriously prejudice the case of Arabi, who, meanwhile, is being subjected to cruel and severe private examinations.

Six two-horse vans filled up Broadway, New York, on Wednesday last week, in a procession and looked up to the top of the General Postoffice. They contained 567 bags of mail matter which arrived by the steamer Hothia. Two hundred and fifty bags of mail were bound for Australia by way of San Francisco.

The New York Sun says: "Of eight young trotters shipped from Sacramento by express on Sunday, five—William, A. Stella, later on, was seen in the city, and was winter for Standard's use on the roads."

Insiders are buying petroleum heavily, and predict higher prices. The pool is buying all the oil obtainable. Some by carrying an amount of oil estimated at 1,000,000 barrels, and is said to have made large loans to Rockefeller's pool. The element in the market is the extreme high rate for carrying oil, which may shake out the weaker holders.

Captain Webb, the English swimmer, has performed the hazardous and sensational feat of swimming 100 hours in a huge tank of fresh water at a temperature of eighty degrees. He lost twenty-six pounds during the time. He was allowed only fifteen minutes in each twenty-four hours in an ante-room, eating, drinking, sleeping and smoking in the bath.

James Smith, resident partner in Chicago of the firm of Palmer & Rey, type foundry and press builders of San Francisco, was found dead, in three feet of water, at Chicago, on the 8th. It is supposed the victim was first struck with a sand club, and then thrown into the water. Mr. Smith was well known in San Francisco, where he was at one time a prominent stock dealer.

Thirty persons have been poisoned from eating headache-manufacture, by local health officers in Leon, Ont. The physicians attribute the trouble to berries being chopped up with the skin of the pork, causing irritation of the stomach's inner coating and producing spasms and vomiting. Some of the sufferers are very low, but it is supposed that all will recover.

The moderate party at Constantinople has gained a victory over the fanatical party. Said Pasha has made two conditions for his remaining in office. First, that each Minister shall be responsible for the work in his own department; second, that the Austro-Turkish alliance be abandoned. The accomplished facts in Egypt accepted and a good understanding with England and France on the Eastern question established.

The Federal Labor Union of Washington City has received resolutions to organize the State industrial clubs, composed mainly of workmen residing at the Capital, from the thirty-eight States of the Union. The Secretary of the club will immediately proceed to correspond with the labor organizations in their respective States, urging the appointment of Congressional District Representatives to a Central Committee on National Legislation.

LA MORGUE.

And this is the end, for here, alone,
I lie at ease on a slab of stone—
No pain, no fear.
At ease I lie, from the rest apart,
With a raged knife thrust through the heart!

How the water drips, drips,
On my sunny face and lips;
How it falling, seems to say—
"He is dead! he passed away—"
—(Sighs.)

And this is the end; it's not a shame
A man who is dead should have a brain
Thinking, throbbing?
I wonder if one who is dead
In her dream of me throughout the day.

See that shaft of moonlight crawl,
Steadily, silent, down the wall!
I wonder how it comes to see
What a dead man's face might be—
—(Sighs.)

How does it come I am here at rest?
With the ghosts who crowd in my breast?
Can I tell?
Was it last night in the streets we met?
Do I remember her tears, her throat,
—(Sighs.)

How she knelt to pray,
As I coldly turned away?
Did she swiftly upward start?
And with danger near my heart?
—(Sighs.)

—FELIX BROWNE.

HOW IT WAS BROUGHT ABOUT.

The Rev. John Jardyson was a peculiar—an eccentric gentleman. That he was a deeply pious and sincere teacher and friend of his parishioners was generally admitted. He was greatly beloved.

But the Rev. John Jardyson was by no means a saint—on the outside. He was quick-tempered. Had he been brought up and educated in a rougher sphere of life, he would have been of the class which seek to govern by a word and a blow—the blow generally preceding the word.

We have said the Rev. Mr. Jardyson was eccentric. This trait in his mental character was strangely manifested toward his wife, an amiable, easily controlled body, and regarded her husband as all but humanly perfect. And yet, strange to say, while he loved the woman, he ignored the wife. It is this peculiarity at which we are aiming.

John Jardyson, while yet a student absorbing into heart and mind the doctrines of the church he was subsequently ordained to teach, became acquainted with gentle Mary Anderson, a young woman of about twenty summers, a pupil in a female academy situated not far from the college in which he was entered a divinity student.

John Jardyson saw Mary while passing out the door of the church where, with other of her classmates, she had been worshipping, and notwithstanding it was the Sabbath, and he a reader for holy orders, he instantly and irrevocably, to employ a vulgar expression in common use, "fell head over ears in love" with her pretty face and light figure.

For many succeeding Sundays John Jardyson saw Mary at a respectful distance, and worshipped as devoutly as he did his Maker, although he would have been greatly shocked to have thought so at the time) the heart free and unconscious of adoration, Mary Anderson.

Of course, John being human, young, and in love, was not the man to worship at an altar where his devotions were not recognized. Inspired by Cupid, therefore, he managed to get introduced to the sweet girl, and although somewhat abashed at first, he did not long delay imparting to her the deep impression she had made upon his heart.

Mary opened wide her eyes, utterly amazed, and then looking for the first time fully in her young lover's face, saw, with the instinctiveness of her sex, that he was just what he had said of himself, her devoted admirer. Of course she was pleased—delighted. Having secured her "fish," she began coyly to play with it, and for a season she led John, who knew nothing of a woman's ways, a pretty dance.

But all things must have an end, and the very day John graduated from the college and Mary from the seminary, which happened on the same date of the month in the same year, they got into a carriage, and on being driven to a neighborly town, were married in the presence of two or three friends, by the pastor of the church there, who was of the same denomination as themselves.

Now, John had somewhere read in a work on doctrine, but what one we never could ascertain, that it was well to marry, but it was not necessary to publish it to the world.

It was a strange thought, and we feel sure John must have dreamed it, for no sensible writer, or teacher of religion, would ever get such an absurd notion into his head, and then have placed it on paper.

Strange to say, John impressed his pretty wife with this idea, and even after his ordination and settlement in a comfortable parish, and she was called Mrs. Jardyson, though never introduced by that name by her husband, but simply as Mary, they continued to jog along happily—she comfortable, but with the sad delusion or eccentric notion in his head.

For years the Rev. John Jardyson and "Mary" continued to reside at the rectorate, and although no children were born to them to bless their union, they were cheerfully and greatly respected.

Everybody was aware of the absurd notion which the "Doctor" for he was finally dignified with the degree of "D. D.," entertained, but everybody pardoned him in consideration of his good qualities, and because "Mary" raised not the slightest objection to it, always smiling pleasantly when the subject was reverted to in her presence, the "Doctor" being absent, for no one dares speak of it to his reverend face, fearful of results. But it was not always to be in this wise.

"Mary" had a brother. She had not seen him for many years—in fact, long anterior to her introduction to John Jardyson, the name she never bore, for he had been taken abroad by an uncle, his mother's brother, who was at that time a Canton merchant.

"Now, this brother's name was Daniel. He succeeded his uncle in business, having inherited his fortune, and finally when, tall and ungainly, he retired from the house, as a leading partner, he resolved to return to his native land, marry, mayhap, and settle down, a sort of nabob in the homestead of his fathers.

Daniel was also eccentric. His sister's letters to him, for they had kept up a cordial correspondence for years, were always signed "Mary Anderson."

This Daniel did not like, and the last thought in his mind on leaving the Chinese coast, and the first on seeing his own, was:

"I'll make the Rev. John Jardyson, D. D., publicly acknowledge Mary as his wife, or I'll know the reason why."

Posting almost immediately upon his landing to the rectory to see and embrace his sister, and for the acquaintance of his brother-in-law, Daniel Anderson arrived at a reasonable hour in the forenoon.

The "Doctor" and "Mary" happened to be pleasantly chatting in the morning room, where a piano stood upon which "Daniel," unrecognized by either, was shown into it.

"I beg your pardon," said Daniel, huskily, as he glanced kindly at the little, pale-faced woman, seated at a table in the middle of the room, reading one of his own letters, "I beg your pardon, but are you the Rev. Dr. John Jardyson, Doctor of Divinity, and Rector of All Saints Church?"

"I am, sir," replied the Doctor, rising to his feet, and looking pleasantly at his interrogator.

"And this lady?" continued the visitor.

The Doctor was surprised. He looked at the stranger carefully, and then at the lady referred to, and slowly answered:

"That is Mary."

"Mary who?" insisted the intruder.

The Doctor's color was rising.

"Do you particularly desire to know who she is, sir?"

"I wouldn't have asked the question if I hadn't a desire that way," brusquely returned the intruder.

"That is the lady Daniel," replied the man, "D. D.," though he was measured him, and quietly said:

"If it will please you to know, sir, her name is Mary Anderson."

"Your housekeeper, I suppose," cried Daniel, with a sneer, "a creature that can be hired at so much a month to cook victuals, wash dishes, and sweep up! Bah! And sit with her master in the parlor!"

"Sir," cried Mary, reddening, and rising from her seat, into which, however, she immediately sunk again, now pale with indignation.

"Sir," cried the Doctor, making a stride forward. "Do you mean to insult her, and—"

"Daniel stood before the upright piano, and said, doggedly, as he turned up his decidedly short nose:

"I won't until I've been introduced to Mrs. Jardyson."

"You're not, eh?" cried the rector.

"What if I make you?"

And before Daniel was aware of his intention he was upon him, his left hand grasping the collar of his shirt, while the right was stretched and ready to plant in Daniel's face should he resist ejection. Mary was taken by surprise. She didn't expect it of him.

Daniel was thrown against the piano, but speedily recovering himself he managed to disengage himself from the Doctor's clutch, and then grasping his hand, for he was much the stronger of the two, he said very coolly, indeed:

"John Jardyson, were you ever married? Deny it and I'll prove you a downright liar."

joy from Mary's lips, but—well! leave the reader to imagine what followed.

An exchange says: "Mr. A. K. H. Bond has a paper on the advantages of dying in the September number of Frazer's Magazine." If there are any advantages to be derived from dying in the September number of the magazine named, the public would like to know what they are. It will be hard to convince some folks that it is more advantageous to die in the September number of Frazer's Magazine than to die in bed.

"Mary Jane," said Dickey, "What?" said Mary Jane. "Mary Jane," said Dickey, "what is the difference between an affectionate wife and a wife that isn't affectionate?"

"Why," said Mary Jane, "one loves him and the other doesn't, you niany."

"What a fool!" said Dickey, "that isn't the answer. The difference is this: One loves her husband and the other husbands her lug." "Don't you wish you had a husband, Dickey?" said Mary Jane.

"Mary," said he, gazing into her bright eyes, "can you tell me why you are like the weather?" "Give it up," said Mary, quite promptly.

"Because," said Charley, "you are so confounded changeable you know."

"Very good," said Mary; "but can you tell me, Charley, why you are like the weather?" Charley having tried to guess, she asked, "because the paper here says the weather is going to clear off?" Charley looked serious and began searching for his hat.

Of course not; they can't perform impossibilities, and they cannot fall in love any more than they do, unless the years are made longer."

CHESS.—About a century after the death of Mohammed (632) the Arabs, inspired by his teachings, had already made themselves masters of a great part of Asia—from the Indus to the Oxus (Amu Daria), the Caucasus, and the Black Sea—of the whole northern coast of Africa, and all of Spain. From the latter country they invaded France, till Charles Martel inflicted terrible defeat upon them which made an end to their conquests in this direction. During the ninth century they appeared in Italy, conquered Sicily, a part of Southern Italy, and advanced as far as Rome. On this immense territory conquered by them arose several States, in which the arts and sciences flourished, for in the Middle Ages the Arabs were the representatives of civilization. They obtained a knowledge of the arts and science of the East and of ancient Greece, improved them, and carried them to the nations of Europe. The proof of this fact we may find in many Arabian terms adopted by all European languages, such as algebra, alcohol, alcohol, almanac, etc. Among the arts the Europeans owe to the Arabs we must count the game of chess, as is proved by the special terms employed in this game. The earliest mention of chess in Europe may be found in Italy, in the writings of Peter Damiano, (Petrus Damiani, born 1007, died in 1072), a monk of the Benedictine Order, and Cardinal Bishop of Ostia, who zealously exposed the vices of the lower and the luxury of the higher clergy.—Brentano's Chess Monthly.

A GIRL FLOGGED TO DEATH.

The Brutal Punishment Inflicted by Missionaries.

Newspapers published on the west coast of Africa contain reports of the hearing of a charge against William F. John, Phoebe John, John Williams and Kezia Williams of having flogged a girl so cruelly as to cause her death. John and Williams were described as agents and schoolmasters of the Church Missionary Society at Onitsha on the Niger. The female prisoners were their wives and the girls whose ill-treatment led to the accusation were persons whom the prisoners had ransomed. The offense alleged was committed in 1877, when both girls ran away from their employers, but were brought back. At midway a number of boys came up from school and commenced to flog them again, by order, as it is stated, of the prisoners; after which two negroes again rubbed pepper into the wounds. During the whole of the afternoon the two victims, still tied together in the way described, lay in the sun, and having succeeded in rolling toward a clump of bushes to seek for shade, it is said the prisoners dragged them back into the sun. In the evening they were untied, and one of them, who afterwards died, was taken away and lashed to a guava tree in the yard of the prisoner John. She was then in a very weak and prostrate condition, the other apparently having suffered less severely. Three days after this the girl who subsequently died was seen in the yard of prisoner John, lying on the ground and bleeding from a fresh wound on the head, while beside her was standing Mrs. John, holding a stick about an inch in diameter. The female prisoner said that the deceased was shamming, and that she had been trying to make her get up, but in vain. The next day the girl died. A large number of witnesses were called at the Police Court, Sierra Leone, on various days between the 24 and 7th of August, who deposed to the facts, stating that the female prisoners were looking on and laughing while the pepper was being rubbed into the bleeding flesh of the two girls, and giving other particulars of the outrage. The prisoners, against whom true bills were presented, reserved their defense, and were to be tried on October 21st.—(St. James Gazette.)

FASHION FLOTTING NOTES.
Fashion favors stripes in silk goods. Astrakhan cloth with tufted surface is revived.
Corded silks outnumber satins in imported dresses.
Long tan-colored gloves continue to be quite popular for evening wear.
At the millinery openings last week muffs were shown to match bonnets.
The sale of plain black velvet this autumn is greater than it has been for several years.
Black and white wool, known as shepherd's check, promises to be a very popular fabric for braided costumes.
Very elegant dresses are literally covered with black lace. Black lace is now worn over colored as well as black silk.
The latest novelties from Paris in ladies' handkerchiefs are daisies, wild sunflowers, or pansies embroidered in their natural colors on black borders.
The fancy for birds has extended even to mourning dresses, and the disagreeable fashion is seen of a black raven perched on an English black crape bonnet.
Very long stemmed roses are the artificial flowers most desirable for corsage bouquets. A single rose costs $1, and from five to ten are mounted in a group.
A rifle-green velvet costume bordered with gray fur, with a small muff and smaller bonnet of the same velvet, edged with fur, is a Paris design for the coming winter.
Handsome velvet flowers of immense size are among the new importations for millinery and for trimming evening dresses. For the latter they are prepared in sets for waist, sleeves and skirt.
Dark gloves will be "all the rage" for October wear. Brown, very clear and rich in finish, dark green, red, tan and blue, are the shades for favor in the lines of gloves and hosiery.
Students' caps of velvet with a soft crown, a shirred band, a large bow in front, and a bird's wing on the left side, are worn by young ladies, and are chosen to match the color of the costume with which they are worn.
Advices from over the Atlantic continue to inform us that the divided skirt still has its adherents among a few fashionable women of advanced ideas. It is said to have its advantages for country and mountain use.
Carrick capes take away the stiff, plain look of cloth redingotes. They are made of plush with a turned-down collar, fastened by a silver brooch; or they may be of the cloth of the garment with the collar covered with braiding and a border of braiding on the edge.

POTATOES IN NEW USES.
They are hereafter to take the place of meerschaum in pipes and of ivory in billiard balls. They are to be converted into chessmen and umbrella handles. They are to decorate the fans and parasols of ladies. Potatoes are coming up. Elephants must, in their well known magnanimity of disposition, have a word or two about potatoes. While they may swallow the tubers boiled—if happily they enjoy the opportunity in civilization of doing so—in their native jungles they must, if they can but hear of the fresh discovery, give a trumpeting of delight at the discovery of something that will serve as a satisfactory substitute for their valuable tubers. It is an Austrian investigator who has brought all this about. He has demonstrated that "meerschaum" pipes of "excellent quality, susceptible of the highest polish, and even more readily colorable than the genuine spinnia di mare," may be made of potatoes. Perhaps some enterprising Pacific States would like to go into the business of manufacturing "meerschaum" from potatoes. This is the way it is done. It is easy enough. After carefully peeling the potatoes and digging out their "eyes," boil them uninterruptedly for thirty-six hours in a mixture of sulphuric acid and water, and then put them into a press. After squeezing out the particle of natural or acquired moisture in them, the residuum is a hard block of a delicate creamy white hue that would by experts be taken for genuine meerschaum. By another process the potatoes can be hardened into a substance as smooth and enduring as ivory, but that secret is not revealed. One at a time is considered enough.

Now that the important discovery is made that "meerschaum" pipes can be manufactured out of the useful potato by any one who has skill enough to mold the bowl, it may be expected that, from directions given, a new article of merchandise may be thrown upon the market. Potatoes may not appreciate materially in value in consequence of the interesting "find-out," notwithstanding that they have acquired a certain additional dignity thereby. Potatoes are not scarce in California. But potatoes as pipes and billiard balls make up a subject worth considering. Potatoes may be scooped out and used as bowls of pipes, to be sure, and they may be scattered about on a billiard table, with all their rough imperfections on them. But to make both "meerschaum" and ivory" out of them and to mold them into harmonious and graceful forms is certainly converting them to new uses. It is the Apprentice Gazette that has made the discovery, and is said to be experimenting.

PREDICTED REVOLUTION.
The North American Review contains an article from the pen of an English writer named H. H. Hyndman, in which he predicts a revolution in England before the close of the present century. As the people become educated they have a better knowledge of the causes operating to keep them poor, and grow restless with their condition. The points made by Mr. Hyndman, as we find them summarized, are to the following effect:
In no civilized country is there such a monopoly of the land as in Great Britain; so much capital, machinery and credit in the hands of a class; such a complete social separation between classes; so striking a contrast between the excessive wealth of the few and the grinding poverty of the many; now also is the machinery of government so entirely in the hands of the non-producing classes, or the people so dependent for their necessary food on sources of supply thousands of miles away; in no country is it so difficult for a man to rise out of the wage-earning classes, or is justice so dear or its administration so completely in the hands of the governing classes who make the laws.
This is a severe arraignment, considering the source.

The other day there was seen in London, for the first time, the Blue Ribbon, the emblem of the teetotaler, worn side by side with the token of the wearer's adherence to the Roman Catholic religion. Cardinal Manning has sanctioned the Blue Ribbon Army by accepting a position in its ranks by the side of the Rev. Newman Hall. In doing so he writes to give his adhesion, because "he considers every good cause tending to draw the human soul from light to darkness as the work of no particular creed, but of God Himself."

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Having received and added to our already immense stock large invoices of new goods, we are now ready to supply our customers with a full line of the latest goods in the market...

Ladies' and Misses' Gents' and Boys' Gossamer Coats, Felt Hats, Parasels, Satelets, Albums, Acornes, Turnspoons, Organum Harmonetas, Cutlery, Fluted Ware, Crockery, Glassware, Magnolia Ware, Stationery, and Fancy Goods...

Agency of the celebrated Home and Sewing Machine, agent for California Surf Co., 327 Sansone Street. The advantage of a one price system, and why the Golden Rule Bazaar succeeds, are as follows:

We don't keep trash; we don't do clapnet advertising in order to catch custom; and then skin them, but we advertise to let people know we are a live house, and where we are to be found. We keep the best goods to be found in the city, and when you trade with us you get a full dollar's worth for 100 cents. If we can sell an article for 10 cents, we don't ask 25 cents for it; but we mark all our goods with an average profit, so that the poorest judge is placed on the same footing with the shrewdest buyer.

We have the best facilities for getting goods direct from the manufacturers, and have enormous shipments of goods on the way, and will give our customers the benefit of it. County orders, whether large or small, receive prompt attention, and if the goods are not satisfactory, can be returned. All goods marked in plain figures and shown with pleasure. Intending purchasers should call and examine our stock. We rely on our extremely low prices from the beginning, and we also rely on the principle on which we are doing business.

We rely on the good judgement of a fair-minded public. E. LOBE & CO., Front Street, Seattle. E. LOBE, 517 Market St., San Francisco.
