EDITORIAL NOTES.

NEXT Tuesday will tell the tale in local, territorial, and national contests.

PRINTING election tickets has been the order of the day in the ARGUS office for the last week or two.

GOVERNOR Ferry and family have removed from Olympia to Seattle. They were tendered a public farewell reception previous to their departure from the capital city.

THE Oregon legislature has passed a bill submitting to a vote of the people an amendment to the State Constitution, allowing women to vote. Mrs. Dunnaway is jubilant.

QUERY? Has Dr. Willison gone into the saloon business, as well as the contest for legislative honors? It is reported that he has opened a place for the disposal of the ardent in this county, in time to capture a few votes before election.

At a meeting of the board of trustees of the insane asylum, last week, Major A. E. Alden was dismissed from his position in that institution, two voting for and one against the removal. He is running for Auditor of Pierce County with a good prospect for election.

MR. "Mart" Pullen, of Quilteute, arrived in this city last Saturday, with 22 head of beef cattle that he had driven all the way from his home—a distance of over a hundred miles of beach and mountain trail travel. The Pullen Brothers have about 150 head of cattle on the Quilteute prairies.

THE Portland "Standard" is very much exercised about colored voters colonizing Oregon, and says fifteen have gone from Olympia. As there never were fifteen in Olympia, the story is thin. Probably Old Man Bryant, from Skookum Chuck, attended the republican demonstration in Portland, and hence the scare—"Transcript."

CONGRESS at its last session having appropriated $2,000 for the improvement of the Cowlitz river, the contract has been let, and work of removing snags and logs out of the river began last week. Light draft boats now run up, at a high stage of the water, to a new place, about a mile and a half above the old Cowlitz Prairie Landing. After the river is cleared out, it is thought these boats will be able to run up at all stages of the water. There is a large country that will thus have an outlet, and much excellent vacant land there. A great many settlers have gone in there the last two years and more are constantly following.

THE Indian demonstrations of hostility to the surveying party, on the Skagit, are subsiding. The presence of a company of troops from Fort Townsend has a tendency to impress the noble siwash with a wholesome regard for the laws. The cause of the trouble was the presence of a party of surveyors to extend the surveys up the river as far as Sauk. There is a large body of very inviting and desirable land on the Sauk river, the principal tributary of the Skagit, which the whites desire surveyed for the purpose of settling thereon. This place having for generations been a favorite resort with the roving bands of Indians outside of the reservations, they naturally protested against the encroachments of the "Boston men" on their happy camping grounds, so a few of them got together and protested against the surveys being extended any further up the river. They threatened the surveyors with violence and the latter called on the Government for protection; and hence the presence of the troops.

"Intelligencer:" Republican journals elsewhere speak of Seattle as being at the best politically doubtful, with strong tendencies in this campaign to Burke and Democracy. Anyone who really thinks this thing is badly out of reckoning. A few men here were blinded by a glitter in the start, but their eyes have since been opened and they now very clearly see wherein they were wrong. The day after the Kalama nomination there were plenty of men to say that King county would give Burke 400 majority, and a few went as high as 600. There isn't a man to day who believes he will run even with Brents, and there are Republicans who are willing to bet that Brents will beat him 100 in the county. We shall be surprised if he doesn't beat him 200.

CORRECTION.—The name of C. W. Young, of King Co., the republican candidate for member of the board of equalization from this district, has been erroneously printed "J. W. Young," in the ARGUS, and also in some of the tickets issued from this office. Voters will please remember to make to make the necessary correction wherever they find tickets printed incorrectly. The mistake was made in setting up the type originally, when we were misled by a report of the proceedings of the territorial convention, also by the ticket published in a cotemporary.

MARRIED.—On Orcas Island, San Juan Co., Oct. 20, 1880, by Rev. F. M. Albright, Mr. Harrison Coffelt to Miss Anna P. Vierick, all of San Juan county. The ceremony was performed at the residence of the bride's father who is one of the staunch men of the county and one of its oldest settlers. Many friends of the happy couple wish them unalloyed happiness.

DOCTOR Minor's family arrived home from the East, on Monday last. They accompanied him on his trip to Washington last February, since which time they have been visiting with relatives in Pennsylvania and Connecticut.

LAST WORDS.—Our readers remember the sad suicide of Mrs. Clark, of Whatcom, since her incarceration in the territorial penitentiary at Seasco for being accessory to the murder of Michael Padden. She was confined in the jail here for a time previous to her trial, which explains the following verbatim letter to jailer Chapman, written the day before she put an end to her miserable existence: "Mr. Chapman Please to rite me a few lines and tell me is my Poor Litel tommy With you. If he is for god sake be good to him. I would give all I Ever seen to Be baok With you a Gain. I am Locked up. I have not Been out side since I come here. Mr. Miller was to good to me and I did not know it. Mr. Chapman I Would like if Mr. Miller could get me back again. I Dont want to stay here. I would Like If I was Dead. I hev got no Bed to Ly on But straw. for god sake Be good to tommy. I got him in to all that trouble. I told the Judge that I told tommy to shoot Padin I did not know What I Was Doing at the time. I had the same spell on me as I yust to take Every month there. Do rite me a few lines. I send 2 kisses to tommy." This letter was perhaps intended as a dying statement. At any rate it shows that the intense agony of mind undergone by the poor woman made her welcome even the death of a suicide.

CLARK AND RICE.—Everyone remembers how these men were sentenced about three years ago, to serve a term in the term in the Territorial penitentiary, for the crime of disposing of spiritous liquors to Indians. They have served their time over half out, and their conduct has been reported very good. At the time they were sentenced the universal verdict was that the punishment was out of proportion with the offense. Since the visit of President Hayes to Port Townsend, Mayor Minor telegraphed him the circumstances of the case and asked in behalf of the citizens of the place that the criminals be pardoned. President Hayes' answer states that the case will meet with favorable consideration, but that nothing can be done until his arrival in Washington. In the meantime a petition to secure the pardon will be circulated for signatures. The lesson these men have already received will doubtless last them the remainder of their days, and, as they are believed to have been sufficiently punished already, it is to be hoped that the movement in their behalf will be successful.

THE contest in this district, for legislative honors, really lies between Messrs. Moor and Kuhn, they being the regular nominees. Dr. Willison's candidacy is merely a little side show that is not even attracting much attention, much less support.

MISS Norris, who has been visiting her brother in this city for the past few weeks, returned to Victoria on Monday last.

WE notice the familiar face of Mr. S. Hadlock on our streets again, after an absence of two months in the Bay City.

Red Crown is the name of a new brand of flour made by the new process and is the best in the market. Sold by C. E. Eibels.

Mr. Korter has made a nice improvement in his barber-shop. We venture to say that he has a shop as neatly fitted up as any on the Sound. He has also fitted up a bathroom for salt and fresh water baths. He has done his best to have one of the finest shops, and is master of his profession.

Platform of Resolutions.

The following resolutions were presented to the Territorial Republican Convention by the Committee on Resolutions, and were unanimously adopted:

RESOLVED, That we unanimously adopt the declaration of principles as embraced in the Chicago platform of the national Republican party.

RESOLVED, That we heartily indorse the present administration of the general government, and that we believe that posterity will award to it the honor of being one of the purest in the history of our country.

RESOLVED, That we favor the early admission of our territory into the sisterhood of states, and our delegate is hereby instructed to use all proper means to secure the same.

RESOLVED, That we regard the unrestricted immigration of the Chinese into the United States as a very grave evil, which should receive the prompt attention of congress and the treaty making powers of the United States, and we favor the speedy modification of our present treaty with China in order that the said immigration, which works so peculiar a hardship to the people of this coast, may be restrained and limited.

RESOLVED, That the opening of our rivers and the removal of obstructions to navigation is not only of local but national importance, and our delegate should endeavor to secure liberal congressional appropriations to aid and encourage the same.

RESOLVED, That we favor the abandonment of our present Indian policy, believing that, while some good results therefrom, yet "evils do much more abound," and we ask such legislation as will place them on the same footing as other citizens; secure them in the enjoyment of the same rights and privileges only, and make them amenable to the same laws. That we deprecate the colonization of Indians from abroad within the limits of the territory, and heartily approve the efforts of our delegate in endeavoring to prevent the same.

RESOLVED, That we hereby endorse the administration of E. P. Ferry, as governor of this territory, during the past eight years for its wisdom and economy in the management of public affairs.

A Personal Difficulty.

NASHVILLE, Oct. 20.—An American special from Nashville gives information of an altercation which occurred between United States District Attorney L. W. Day and William Edwards. Edwards fired three shots at Day without effect. The origin of the quarrel was a personal editorial which appeared in the Huntsville Advocate, and which reflected on Edwards's wife. The object of the newspaper attack was to break down Edwards's character, on account of his exposure of the Greenback Republican alliance in Alabama.

A Probable Failure.

PARIS, Oct. 21.—A Herald's Madrid cablegram says: Forty days having elapsed since the birth of the Infanta, two curious ceremonies took place at the palace. When the babe was christened, the Queen went to the chapel and took the Infanta from the governess, and knelt on the cushions of the altar, holding the child while the Cardinal Patriarch of Indis read the gospel of purification over her. There was a great display. Thousands of people of all classes crowded the court yards and staircases of the palace, eager to enter, but their efforts were in vain. Directly after the ceremony the papal nuncio arrived in state and was received with royal honors. The papal brief was read to the King and ministers in the grand court yard. The brief expressed Rome's great sympathy with the sovereign of Spain, and pronounced a particular blessing on the Queen and Infanta. The nuncio then went to the Queen's chamber and opened an alabaster gold embossed casket, containing the satin dresses and embroidered covers for the Infanta and relics for the Queen, and blessed them. The nuncio will conduct the Queen to-morrow to the cathedral, where the Te Deum will be chanted. On Saturday a grand levee and banquet will be given.

The Wheeler Tragedy.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 21.—Mrs. Wheeler, whose husband betrayed and murdered her sister, is a rather delicate looking woman of about 28 years of age. She is of very prepossessing appearance, and shows every indication of refinement and culture. She stated to a Chronicle reporter to-day that her maiden name was May Tillis, and that she was born in Shrewsbury, Mass., and that eight years ago she became the wife of Wheeler and lived with him at her father and mother's house at Shrewsbury until the Fall of 1878, when they started for New York taking her sister, who was since murdered, along with them. They lived in New York for some time, and while there her sister was taken very ill. It was then that she found that her husband had led the poor girl astray. Mrs. Wheeler questioned her sister in the matter and she confessed all and begged Mrs. Wheeler not to bring the gray hairs of their parents to the grave by disclosing the awful secret. The wretched girl gave birth to a child, but it did not live, so the secret was kept. Shortly afterwards the three, Wheeler, his wife and wife's sister came to San Francisco. The wife lived a very unhappy life. They went from San Francisco to Placer county, where Wheeler was offered a position of engineer in a mine. It was at Cisco that Geo. Peckham became acquainted with the murdered girl and paid court to her. Wheeler then became furiously quarrelsome and would not work steadily, and consequently their money gave out. About six weeks ago Wheeler took the sister to San Francisco, leaving his wife alone; but Mrs. Wheeler followed them after a lapse of two weeks. When she arrived she found her husband and her sister living together as man and wife, at 23 Kearney street. She said nothing, for as she feelingly expresses it, "I could only look and hope: My poor little sister was as frightened as I was. She had submitted herself to him and he held her to himself like a fiend. Peckham came from Cisco and he told me he loved Della; but I hadn't the heart to tell him the relations existing between Della and my husband. He insisted on marrying her, and had she not been molested all might have been well. I thought, at least, we might all be happy once more, but no. Oh, my God! tell me it is her." The poor woman, after these exclamations, fainted, and afterward went into violent fits of hysteria. Mrs. Wheeler's sister, the poor murdered girl, was extremely handsome, with golden, brown hair, a slender and graceful form, and about 21 years of age.

TUCSON, Oct. 20.—A special from El Paso gives particulars of the annihilation of Victorio and his band in Mexico by Mexican soldiery. The band were overtaken on the 14th inst. and were compelled to take a stand. Their ammunition was about exhausted and they were unable to make a hard fight. Three Mexicans were killed, and the Indians lost their chief, 51 warriors, 13 women and a number of children.

Doig Will Probably Escape.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 21.—Capt. Doig appeared to-day in the District Court on a writ of habeas corpus, asking for discharge from custody. His counsel made the point that he could not be sent to Oregon for trial as the offense was committed outside the State of Oregon. Judge Hoffman took the matter under advisement.

It accords with his whole course, and everyone should know that Garfield always took questions affecting the interest of employers in New York. A facsimile of the letter is being electrolyped."

The Signal Service.

The propositions that were numerous made in the press and elsewhere immediately after the decease of the late Gen. Albert J. Meyer, that the functions of the signal corps relating to meteorological observation should be wholly divorced from the army, and that the signal service, so called, should be attached to some other department of the government or made a separate bureau, have apparently had little or no effect upon the public mind, and there is small expectation in any intelligent quarter that a material change in relation of the signal service and the army is to occur. Whatever theoretic arguments may be adduced in favor of separating the present observation corps from the army, it cannot be denied that the weather service has been developed into its present high state of efficiency under the charge of army officers and by the application of military methods. The natural tendency under our form of government is, and should be, to let well enough alone, and in the case of the signal service it is not pretended, we believe, that the public would be any better served, or that any substantial benefit would result from the organization of the business of meteorological observation on a new basis.

The more fully popular attention is called to the admirable condition of this branch of the public service, the stronger will be the inclination on the part of the people to continue the signal service as a staff department of the army. Unless the army itself shall declare in favor of a change, we fancy that there will be none, and that some competent military officer will be appointed to take charge of the service and to carry on the great work which it is now doing for the country. We are confident that this will be all the more certain when it is understood how completely the ideas of a true civil service have been applied in the organization of the signal service. Here is one bureau of the government to which the complaints of the "civil service reformer" have no pertinency, for here all the ideas of the civil service reformer are perfectly exemplified. Appointments by examination, promotions according to merit, and tenure of office are all adequately maintained and secured by the system which now exists. Who can say that they would be as well maintained as they now are if the service were converted into a separate bureau of the government, as some persons have seemed to think it ought to be? The public perhaps does not realize that under these regulations the service is attracting a very fine class of young men, whose experience and training is destined to be of the greatest permanent value to the government. Convert the signal service into an independent bureau and how long would it be before this, like some other departments of the government, would become a mere adjunct of the political machine of the party that may happen to be in power!

Served Him Right.

A man always gets into a scrape when he pokes around among his wife's things without permission. Mr. Durfee, of Jersey City, had been annoyed by having his wife sell his old clothes to peddlers, and thought one day when a peddler called in her absence, that he would reciprocate; so he traded a lot of her old garments off for tinware and plaster images, and among other things a pair of half-worn corsets. He rubbed his hands in silent enjoyment over the joke. But when his wife returned and was informed of the transaction she rushed up stairs to see what was gone, and not finding the corsets exclaimed: "John Henry, you didn't sell them corsets?" "Oh, yes, I did," he replied. "I found a disreputable old pair and let them go."

The wife burst into tears, and between sobs explained that in order to hide from burglars the $1,100 he had entrusted to her for safe-keeping, she had sewed the money up in those corsets. John Henry is an ampler man than he was, but he can't find the rag peddler.

A Madman's Ride.

Deputy Master Thomas Boone, of this city, relates the details of a most dangerous ride of a madman on the Reading road. When the train in charge of Conductor Figanier arrived in Port Clinton, and while the inspector was tapping the wheels of the forward car, he observed the figure of a man extended on the front track. Finding himself the center of attraction, the man slowly made his way from his uncomfortable position, and at last stood upright in the glare of the lantern. He was a man of medium stature, apparently well dressed, but lacking a hat. His hair stood on end from the force of the wind, caused by the rapid journey in the open air. His face and head—in fact his entire person—were coated with coal dust. How he succeeded in making the journey without injury was a mystery which he refused to explain. On being informed that he couldn't travel on the train any longer without a ticket he rushed into the depot and purchased one for Pottsville. Shortly after the train had started on its way to Port Clinton, the conductor found the tramp standing on the hind platform of the car.

"You must get on the inside," said the conductor, "it's dangerous to ride on the platform." The madman stared at the conductor and said: "No, sir; I don't want to get in. I won't go in. If you touch me, I'll jump off!" The train was going at a high rate of speed. The conductor succeeded in getting the man inside the car, but a few moments later the stranger suddenly jumped to the door, reached the platform, descended the steps, and acted as if he intended to jump into eternity. The passengers were alarmed. The madman leaned over from the carsteps, and catching hold of the iron bars of the nearest window, swung himself out into space.

Leaving the tramp swinging in a manner to make those who saw him turn away their heads, the conductor hastened inside the car and pulled the bell-ropes. He had no sooner done this than the tramp made a spring to the next window. He swung himself from window to window until he reached the middle of the car, peering into each window as he passed, and yelling at the top of his voice, "I will beat you into Pottsville yet."

The passengers in the rear car were terrified at the dangerous position of the man, especially when it became known that the train was approaching a bridge near Landingville. The bridge was reached and all expected to see the man swept from his moorings, but when the danger was passed the yelling outsider still maintained his position. A little further on he suddenly disappeared, and all hands expected to see his mangled remains when the train shot past. Just as Landingville appeared in sight the tramp also appeared, who was running up the hill at full speed, still shouting pet names to the conductor and "I'll beat you to Pottsville yet." The man is supposed to have run to the hills, as yet he is not known.—Reading Eagle.

A Sharp Witness.

A late number of the New York Herald gives the following incident which occurred in the Tombs Police Court, a few days ago, when a witness went to testify to the good character of his countryman, Patrick McGrath, who was charged with assault and battery. The witness was too garrulous and went too deeply into the genealogy of the McGraths to suit the complainant's counsel. Twice he tried to arrest the torrent of anecdotes, and failing in it he lost temper, and said:

"Did you ever talk a man to death, sir?"

"No; did ye ever do it yourself?" asked the witness, quite as tartly.

"Yes," said counsel, with an absent air, but watching his opportunity for a thrust. "Yes, a couple of hundred of them, I suppose."

"Is that all?" quoth the witness sharply. "Thin ye haven't batt the record yet?"

"Haven't beat the record! Whose record?"

"Samson's," returned the witness, sharply. "He slew three hundred Philistines wid the instrument ye use yourself."

The subsequent queries put to that witness were remarkable for their brevity.

A doctor, being out for a day's shooting, took an errand-boy to carry the game-bag. Entering a field of turnips, the dog pointed, and the boy, enjoying at the prospect of his master's success, exclaimed, "Lor, master, there's a covey; if you get near 'em won't you physic 'em!" "Phyic 'em, you young rascal, what do you mean?" said the doctor. "Why, kill 'em; to be sure," replied the lad.

His Lost Wife.

The police yesterday had a call from an old man who had come down from Isabella county with his wife to see the State fair.

"You see, we was lookin' at the runnin' races. Such things allus excite me, fur I've bin thar myself. The hoss I bet on was losin' ground, and I tried to climb a stump to swing my hat and encourage him."

"How old is your wife?" asked the officer. "About 22," replied the old man as a red came to his face.

"I believe I saw two or three of 'em there." "Old man," said the officer, after a long pause, "I want to ask you a question, and I hope you will not get of fended."

"Suppose, now, that your wife had had— That is to say, suppose she had—"

"By gum," exclaimed the old man, as he shut up his jack-knife: "I believe I ketch your meaning. If Hanner has played that trick on me, somebody'll get shot."

"That's only my theory," mused the officer. "Perhaps she loves you and wouldn't think of eloping."

"I dunno about that—I dunno. I gave her 120 acres of mighty nice land before she'd have me. What shall I do? I feel as if I stood on a hot gridiron."

"The old man hurried off at a canter, and when the hour was up the officer walked down to the stand. There he found a cross-eyed, lop-shouldered woman sitting on the fence, with her No. 7 feet displayed to the gaze of thousands.

"That's her, and she never even thought of eloping."

"The officer looked the young wife over from head to foot, and was turning away when the old man whispered: "I kin see them feet, and them eyes, and that shoulder just as plain as you kin, but I'm no fool! Her mother is the only woman in our county who weaves rag carpets, and her dad has lent me $200 without an indorser. And, say!"

"Yes." "The land I gin her has twelve tax titles and a mortgage on it—see? K-e-l-u-c-k—whoop! I'm no chicken!"

And he climbed up beside her, put his arm around her waist, and yelled out that he would back the roan horse against the field.—(Detroit Free Press.)

HUMMING BIRDS—Let us follow little Dan, the oldest and sharpest of humming bird catchers, as he goes out for birds. First he goes to a tree called the mountain palm, which replaces the cocoa palm in the mountains, the latter growing only along the coast.

On one occasion a camel-driver had insulted the animal in his charge. The driver, from the expression of its eye, saw that there was mischief in it, and kept sharp watch for some days.

One night before he retired to rest he left his cloak spread over the wooden saddle of the camel outside the tent. During the night the camel approached the cloak, and believing that its master was fast asleep under it, lay down and rolled itself backwards and forwards over the cloak; the saddle broke under its weight, and the animal was evidently much pleased at what it thought was the cracking and breaking of its master's bones.

After a time it rose, and looking with contentment on the hayco it had caused, retired from the spot. Next morning, the driver, who had heard all that the camel had done, presented himself to the animal. The disappointed camel was in such a rage on seeing its master, safe and well that it died.

YEAST.—One pint, washed potatoes, water and all, one cup of flour, one cup of strong hop tea, four quarts of boiling water. When nearly cold add a pint of good yeast. Let it stand for 24 hours, occasionally stirring it well; strain it and put it in a jug and set in a cool place.

LEMON PRESERVE.—One pound of pounded loaf sugar, quarter pound of butter, six eggs and the whites of four well-beaten, the rind of two lemons grated, and the juice of two lemons together and let it simmer till of the consistency of honey. Be careful to stir all the time, or it will burn.

A young German was once pressing his suit and in the midst of his ardent questioning the object of his choice as to her possible financial future. "I have heard," he said, "that your good father has two large estates in Silesia."

"Yes," was the native reply, "and he owns two more in Pomerania." The suitor hesitated a moment as though to catch his breath, and then falling on his knees and looking the young lady imploringly in the face, cried out, "and can you, my darling, doubt my affections under such circumstances?"

Capt. Kidd.

Search for hidden treasure, whether deposited by nature or buried by misers or freebooters, has always been one of the most fascinating occupations for the bulk of mankind.

The burial of Capt. Kidd's actual, or imagined, treasure exemplifies this peculiarity. Men have been hunting for it periodically on the banks of the Hudson and the shores of Long Island Sound for a century and a half.

Just now, a number of visionaries seem to be confident that they have discovered the place, nearly opposite Peekskill, where a great deal of the pirate's gold lies in a sunken ship in the river, ready to be recovered by those enterprising souls.

William Kidd was not, as has been sometimes thought, English by birth. He was an American, probably a New Yorker, and appears to have followed the sea from his youth.

About 1695, when he was, presumably, some 40 years old, he was accounted one of the boldest and most skillful ship masters sailing from this port.

Piratical inroads had at that time grown to be so frequent and serious upon British commerce that a company was formed in which William Kidd, and several prominent noblemen were shareholders, to equip an armed vessel for their suppression as well as for profit, to be derived from recaptures.

At the suggestion of Col. Richard Livingston, Kidd, who had some experience as Captain of a privateer against the French, received a commission signed by the King as commander of the Adventure Galley carrying 30 guns.

Sailing from Plymouth, England in the Spring of 1698, he cruised for some months off our shores, occasionally coming into this port.

He here recruited his force to 150 men and then sailed for the East Indies and the African coast. During the voyage he determined to turn pirate himself, and, finding his officers and crew willing to join him, began plundering whatever ships he found off Malabar and Madagascar.

He returned hither in 1698 with a great deal of booty; buried a portion of it on Gardner's Island, and then went to Boston, where he appeared with characteristic audacity in the streets, believing that he could, under his commission, clear himself of any charge of piracy that might be brought against him.

The reports of the enormity of his outrages had reached England, and caused the Earl of Belmont, then Governor of Massachusetts and New York, and one of the shareholders of the Adventure Galley enterprise, to have Kidd apprehended and conveyed to London.

As is very hard to prove him a pirate, he was arranged for killing one of his crew, John Moore, by striking him with a bucket during a quarrel, and after an obviously unfair trial he was condemned and hanged. The treasures he had left—about 800 ounces of gold, 900 ounces of silver, and several bags of silver ornaments—were secured by Bellostin; but in the vulgar belief these formed an magnificent portion of his plunder, which imaginative persons have been seeking ever since.—New York Times.

A REVEREND CAMEL.—We find this Eastern story illustrating the camel's magnanimity and passion—nowwithstanding his patience and good service when well treated:

On one occasion a camel-driver had insulted the animal in his charge. The driver, from the expression of its eye, saw that there was mischief in it, and kept sharp watch for some days.

One night before he retired to rest he left his cloak spread over the wooden saddle of the camel outside the tent. During the night the camel approached the cloak, and believing that its master was fast asleep under it, lay down and rolled itself backwards and forwards over the cloak; the saddle broke under its weight, and the animal was evidently much pleased at what it thought was the cracking and breaking of its master's bones.

After a time it rose, and looking with contentment on the hayco it had caused, retired from the spot. Next morning, the driver, who had heard all that the camel had done, presented himself to the animal. The disappointed camel was in such a rage on seeing its master, safe and well that it died.

A Battle Royal.

Lord Archibald Campbell sends to the Scotsman the following account of a battle of which he was a witness, between a thresher, a swordfish and a whale, off Belleisle, at 5 P. M., on Sept. 7th.

His Lordship, who was a passenger on the Peruvian, writes: "When outside Belleisle Island (at 51° 55' N., long. 54° 51' W.), with icebergs of no great size on either bow, and fairly in the Arctic current and the Teutonia on our starboard bow, the first of fier told me that he had seen twice a large thresher fish leap clean out of the water not far from our bows.

We kept a close watch near about where he had last seen the fish; nor had we long to wait, and for the next ten minutes to a quarter of an hour we watched a tremendous fight between this fish and the large whale, which, evidently attacked also from below by a swordfish, was, in effectually trying to sound and do all in its mighty power to get away, but there was no escape.

The thresher, an enormous fish—reckoned by the first officer and engineer, to be 30 feet in length—kept continually lashing the whale with its powerful tail, and, as if not satisfied that these stunning blows had told, threw itself into the air with enormous leaps, landing on the back of the whale with the most resounding whacks.

The sublime and the ludicrous were strangely blended in these attacks; the passengers and crew were all gathered at the bulwarks, fascinated by the gigantic fight. The whale turned in its agony almost belly upmost, casting itself about in all directions, but there was no escape. It never got deep below the surface, which was churned by its mighty efforts into a seething mass of foam.

The combatants went right in the teeth of the wind and sea then running. We saw the whale in a regular "furry" often, and when our straining eyes last saw them they were at it as hard as ever, and it was the opinion of most on board that the whale was fast sickening. The whole of the underpart of the whale was white, and I hope some one will give me some information as to its species.

From the tips of the tail to the jaw it was as if painted pure white, a leaden color above. There were many on board who had sailed the Atlantic for upwards of thirty years, but had never seen such a fight. It took place, so to speak, close to both vessels, the fight raging between our ship and the Teutonia.

"Tasted Dreiful Queer." We have heard of people curing others of using strong drink by putting an emetic into their whisky bottles. The following story, told in Harper's Drawer, illustrates the wedding manners of seventy years ago, and the simplicity of a green young benedict:

A minister of Newburyport was once called up, after he had gone to bed, to marry a couple. The hour was late, and the minister's wife did not rise to witness the ceremony, but gave her husband particular directions for the entertainment of the guests.

"Don't forget to pass the cake and wine, doctor," said she. "The cake is in the corner cupboard, and you'll find the wine on the third right hand shelf in the sideboard."

"Doctor," she cried, "did you give them any wine?" "Certainly, my dear, just as you told me."

"Not from the decanter on the third shelf in the sideboard?" "That is exactly where you directed me to find it."

"Dear! dear! Did they drink much of it?" "Why, yes; they emptied their glasses."

"What shall we do? Doctor, I made a mistake—it was ipsecac wine you gave them. Oh, how sick they must be! Do, dear, put on your cloak and go right after them. They can't have got far."

"What made you drink the wine?" he asked. "Couldn't you tell by the taste that there was something wrong about it?"

The bridegroom answered between his quavers: "She whispered to me that it tasted dreiful queer, but I told her 'twas because we was gittin' married."

BREASTFEAR PIE.—Take cold roast beef, cut it into thin slices about an inch and a half long. Take raw potatoes; peel them and cut them into thin slices. Have ready a deep dish, lay some of the potatoes at the bottom, and then a layer of beef, and so on till the dish is filled. Season as you would chicken pie, fill it with boiling water, cover it with a crust and bake it.

As an item of interest, we will mention a Bradford Co., Penn., paper contains, in an account of an agricultural fair held at East Towanda, about the 1st of this month, a reference to some of the extraordinary handwork of Mrs. A. B. Smith. Mrs. S. is the aged mother of our townsman, Gen. D. W. Smith, and the article referred to is a bed quilt containing 15,242 pieces. How many of our school girls could do as well?

Tax Walla Walla "Statesman," in commenting upon the election of our next delegate to congress, says: "This is no time to be making an experiment." Republicans all over the territory will heartily say amen to this sentiment. The people know what Mr. Brents has done for us, and to exchange him for Mr. Burke would be a foolhardy experiment.

We have received some interesting items from Quileute, but have not room for them in this issue. Mr. A. J. Smith of Quileute, went up to Seattle a few days ago. His daughter will attend school there.

BORN.—In this city, Oct. 18th, to the wife of Mr. C. F. Clapp, a daughter.

COUNTY JAIL.

EDITOR ANON.—For some time past there has been a great deal of talk relating to the escape of prisoners from our county jail, during which discussion censure has been placed on sheriff Miller, unjustly, as it is nothing but a wooden jail. Again, the county has not provided for the payment of a jailor—the sheriff only receiving such small remuneration as the wise Solons of the Territory have thought sufficient; also, the jail has not the amount of iron spikes in the lumber that it was supposed to have.

Now, in consideration of the above reasons, I will agree to forfeit to any person or persons the sum of five hundred dollars if I cannot cut my way out of said jail within eight hours with use of a sheath knife alone. Let the blame rest, if any, where it belongs—on the building—and not on our worthy sheriff. J. J. HUNT. P. Townsend, Oct. 23th, 1880.

MR. RYAN, OR MISS HANCOCK?

No subject, besides their liberty, more deeply interests the American people than the education of their children. The public school is the public safeguard, and the county superintendent—who has the supervision of the schools of the county—is, or should be, the embodiment of wisdom, experience and executive ability. Upon him the law has placed a great responsibility, and upon him the people largely depend for the exercise of that keen, discriminating judgment that can come only from large experience and special normal training—in examining, advising and encouraging teachers and scholars that are to bring our schools up to the high and scientific standard of system and perfection which shall be a credit to our age, enterprise and civilization. We pay him, and we expect him to be a person whose age, experience, and learning fit him for the office; one whom—while our minds are absorbed with the cares of business—we can implicitly trust to superintend the education of our children, and see that our money is not squandered upon incompetent teachers. The office, then, is one of very great importance, and it behooves the people to think seriously before they vote, and not do helpless children an injustice. Do not vote for a person whom you GUESS is fit, but vote for one whom you KNOW is fitter.

Mr. R. E. Ryan is a teacher by profession, and has taught in this county for the past eight years, and the highest schools in it. He has served one term as county superintendent of schools of this county, and was nominated for a second term, but declined; and, to his devotion to the cause of education, are we largely indebted for the present prosperous condition of our public schools. He has the ability to judge between good and poor teaching, the experience and training from which to make valuable suggestions to teachers, and his age and judgment would command for him the esteem and confidence of boards of directors, and of the teachers and scholars whom the law makes it his duty to visit and counsel.

For Miss Hancock we have no words of reproach, except that in our humble judgment her youth and inexperience (she is about 20 21) incapacitate her for the office; while there are those in the county who have had a much larger experience, and have as good if not a better education. We think it would be simply ridiculous for her to examine such able educators as Mr. Ryan or Prof. Kerr, for certificates, or to visit their schools and undertake to tell them how to teach; or to sit in judgment to gravely decide disputes in relation to school matters, arising among directors who are venerable with age, and men of ripe and able judgment. It seems to us that such a spectacle would be a laughable yet lamentable farce, and we hope it may never happen. We do not believe it will. We have confidence that there are enough FATHERS in the county, who will stand up for the welfare of the children and overwhelm with their votes the few sentimental young men who desire the election of Miss Hancock simply because she is a young lady.

We will do Miss Hancock the justice of saying that she did not seek the nomination, and was surprised when it came to her. Of course she is anxious to be elected, now that she is in the field but we believe she will have more friends and less unpleasant feeling with her neighbors and the county in general if she keeps out of a trying position like that of superintendent of schools.

The Walla Walla "Union" says that Mr. Brents will get a larger vote in eastern Washington than he did last time, and we do not doubt it.

OUR NEXT SHERIFF.

From all parts of the county come news of the most encouraging kind that Mr. F. W. Hastings will be elected our next sheriff. This is as it should be, and in accordance with the eternal fitness of things. Mr. Hastings is a candid, honest and capable man, and we believe he will conduct the office more economically and with better satisfaction to the people, than it has been conducted for a number of years. He does not indulge in cheap talk to please anybody; but, on all occasions, to all men, pleasantly says what he means and means what he says. Reliability, sincerity and truthfulness are indispensable attributes of a good public officer, and men of business must, and do, appreciate this. Now, if you want a man for sheriff on whom you can rely, one whose word is as good as his bond, who will keep perfect good faith with you and not deceive you, who will be true to his trust and active and vigilant in the discharge of his duties—vote for F. W. Hastings, and our word for it he will not disappoint your wishes in those particulars. There is nothing uncertain about him; he has dwelt among us from infancy and is respected by everybody. It is not his custom to "gin up" often and spin long yarns (which no one believes) to the boys, but if you have any business with his office you will find him THERE—ready to attend to it in a most obliging manner.

It is quite true that Mr. Miller, in spite of his lavish expenditure of money for electioneering purposes, will lose dozens of votes from staunch democrats who have supported him heretofore and who would vote for him again could they conscientiously do so. No doubt the virulent attacks made upon him by the "Press," of this place, are extremes in their way, yet there is reason to believe that some of the charges made by that paper are founded in truth. Whether this is true or not, the fact still remains patent that there is a wide-spread dissatisfaction with the loose and extravagant manner in which the affairs of the office of sheriff have been administered—especially during the last two years—and nowhere is this dissatisfaction more plainly manifested than among democrats. The only way to adjust this matter so as to fill the office to the satisfaction of all is to elect Mr. Hastings, which will undoubtedly be done.

COLONEL Larrabee's campaign thunder that is to be exploded here to-morrow evening must be taken with a few grains of allowance, on account of the motives that furnish its animus. The "Oregonian" has very properly given its readers the benefit of a letter written by the garrulous "Kuhnel" to a Seattle Journalist just after the presidential nominations were made. Larrabee was in the Skagit mines at the time of writing, and, in his letter, he expressed his disgust at Hancock's nomination and his intention of supporting Garfield. The existence of this letter and its contents were known long before our military hero went over to Oregon to saw the air and shriek for democracy. There are cogent reasons back of this jerky and inconsistent action of our friend, not generally understood. It seems that Larrabee was at one time in Hancock's command, and, as the story goes, he thirsted for promotion, and had a petition circulated, asking that he be appointed to a brigadier's position. Gen. Hancock not only refused to sign the petition but did so in about the following unpretty language: "What, sign a petition to promote THAT SQUIRT?" It was the remembrance of this unkindly treatment that caused the first spontaneous outburst of indignation on the part of our friend when he heard of Gen. Hancock's nomination for president—at least if we are correctly informed. Afterward, however, visions of a not altogether unlikely appointment as Chief Justice of Washington Territory in case of national democratic success caused a change. Indignation and rage gave way to quieter ideas where sordid avarice and selfish motives began to shape the meditative ruminations. A purpose was bogotten, and that purpose led to action, until circumstances accumulated to develop the details of a clearly defined plan, and, like the multitudinous minutiae connected with the fabled "house that Jack built," link after link was fastened on, and the man became a full fledged howler for Hancock. Verily, "things are not what they seem."

As we go to press the news comes that the Russian murderer, Geo. Matzon, has escaped a second time from the jail. From all appearances there is little room to doubt that he was assisted by persons from the outside. He had not been gone more than about half an hour when the escape was discovered, so that his recapture is confidently hoped for.

PCT Mr. Seavey down for the largest majority ever given in Jefferson county. Everybody knows his administration of affairs in the Auditor's office too well to vote against him.

As the literary society at Port Discovery is said to be developing some debaters of ability, we would suggest that the "Alki's," of this place, send them a challenge for a joint discussion.

MR. John McBeaver, of Mason county, the democratic nominee for Joint Councilman from this district, has been canvassing Jefferson county this week. He will be an easy prey for Mr. Hovey.

THE last steamer from Dungeness brought, among others, Misses Cora Davis and Bertha Knoph, of that place; the former on her way to Victoria, the latter to remain a week or two in this place.

WE are in receipt of a large number of copies of Ingersoll's great speech recently delivered in Indiana. It deals with national political issues only, and is a masterly argument against the solid South.

FARMERS will hardly forget to vote for Mr. Bishop next Tuesday. He is the only farmer running for County Commissioner on either ticket, and besides he has held the office long enough to demonstrate his thorough capability.

VOTE A STRAIGHT TICKET.—Those republicans who have been rubbing noses with certain democratic candidates for local positions, and who propose trading votes on election day, would do well to consider what they are about before deserting any of the worthy candidates of their own party. The republican party of Jefferson county will hereafter remember those who are traitors to it from personal or pecuniary considerations, and such remembrance may be of the kind they will not desire should they be seeking a county office.

THE only argument used against Mr. Frank Hastings by his opponents, is that he is too young and inexperienced to satisfactorily fill the office of sheriff; that he will get his bondsmen into trouble, &c. This is the veriest bosh. The duties of the position are plain and simple enough, surely, and for a young man like Mr. Hastings to discharge them properly is no more than may be reasonably expected. The argument referred to is certainly the weakest ever heard of, yet it seems to be the only one that even Mr. Miller's fertile brain can concoct.

WE are pleased to notice Capt. deLion out on the streets again after his protracted confinement with a broken leg. The attending physician says that the Captain is very fortunate in being a temperate man; that if his blood had been filled with whisky poison the loss of his leg would have been inevitable.

NEXT Monday evening there will be a grand republican rally in Port Townsend, at which time the political issues involved in the present campaign will be fully, fairly and thoroughly discussed for the last time previous to the final decisive contest. Let all turn out and get the full benefit of the occasion.

WE have gratifying assurances of the election of the republican county ticket in San Juan county. The county will perhaps give Burke a small majority, being a democratic stronghold, but the vote will not be nearly as large as our democratic friends are claiming, for the reason that the people there are quite well satisfied with Mr. Brents' labors in Congress.

TREASURER Bartlett's notice in another column warns everybody that "those everlasting taxes" are soon to become delinquent. "A stitch in time" &c., may be quoted in this connection to prove that a little "unseemly haste" about this time of the year may save our taxpayers several dollars.

EVERY vote for Hastings, from the democratic side will count two. There are a number of staunch democrats in Jefferson county, whom we know are going to vote squarely with the republicans in this matter and thus swell Frank's majority.

Reward of Merit. The Oregon Kidney Tea has been awarded two medals by the Oregon State Agricultural society, the first of bronze and the second gold, the difference in value of the two indicating the increase in the esteem of the community which a year's trial of the remedy has induced. For all diseases of the kidneys and urinary organs it is unsurpassed. Don't fail to try it. Ask your Druggist for it.

The Old Fiddle.

"David, I'll get supper." "Much supper, Peggy?" "Well, thank God, we have porridge." "How will it be to-morrow?" "As God wills. Go get me a bit of kindling wood." "I'll just split up this old fiddle, Peggy." "The fiddle, David? No you shan't, then." "But he had taken it down from the wall." "Give it to me David," said Peggy. "Don't you remember the Summer the foreign gentleman boarded here, and how he'd play for us after tea, and Bob liked it so. There's an angel shut up in that thing, only we don't know how to make her sing. How he used to scrape at it. It was as sweet as a nightingale." "All well enough, Peggy, but he left us nine weeks' board not paid when he died." "Do you begrudge it, David?" "Oh, no, Peggy, but it's just one of the things that has helped to put us down." "Charity never did that, David." "Oh you women! You believe all the preacher tells you. Well I hope it's a comfort to you." "We need some," said Peggy. "Ah, we need some." And surely that poor woman did need it. David was out of work; most of her belongings sold—the clock, the carpet, the bright tea tray, her black silk dress, her own hand sprained so that she could not work; and their only son away across the ocean, for he was a sailor. But she had tidied up the room, dusted the old fiddle on which that strange Italian, who boarded with them for the sea air, had played so gloriously, to her thinking, and hung it on the wall. His last words were: "I give you my violin, remember, guard it well." "It wouldn't fetch five cents," said she, "so no need of selling it; but I can see our Bob dancing to it now, those were happy times, and that minds me of them." There was a little meal in the house and she made porridge of it, and spread a clean towel on the table; but where the next meal was to come from she did not know. "The ravens are fed," she said to herself, "I'll trust in God." And she asked a blessing over the two yellow bowls. Her husband shook his head. "There's the river anyway," he muttered to himself. "I'll never be town poor, come what may." But now as they sat in silence a low rumbling was heard. A storm was rising; the sky grew dark; lightning flashed; thunder rolled; the rain beat upon the panes, and some one knocked upon the door. Peggy opened it. A gentleman stood there. "May I come in, sir?" he asked, gaily. "I have no umbrella. I shall be drenched." "Oh, come in, sir," said Peggy. She sat a chair for him. David pushed his bowl away and sat by the empty fireplace, as he had an excuse for turning his back upon the stranger. Then his eyes lifted to the spot over the mantelpiece, where the old violin hung, and suddenly he gave a cry. "How! what! are you musical here?" "You, sir—do you play the violin?" "No," answered David, roughly, without looking round. "Neither me nor mine ever yet fiddled." "It's a pretty instrument, the fiddle," said Peggy, gently. "I admire to hear it, but my old man don't play, though we got one, as I see you notice. That was left here by a poor gentleman we boarded, a foreigner. He died and he gave us the fiddle. He asked me to be careful of it, so I be sort of fer his sake. He used to give us such good tunes on it, quavery tunes way up and way down that made me think of courtin' times, and when I was a little gal and mammy cuddled me up; real lively tunes." "Yes—I suppose so. Only a good musician could have owned such a violin. Will you let me see it? It's a stradivarius, if I'm not mistaken." "I thought it was a real old, cracked thing," said Peggy. "I used to wish he had a new one," and she handed it down. "A stradivarius!" cried the gentleman. "Good people, this is a treasure. It is better than a pot of gold. It is worth a great deal of money." David turned his head suddenly. "You are making a fool of that poor old woman," he said. "A cracked fiddle worth money! Jones, the carpenter, couldn't get Isaac, the pawnbroker, to lend him fifty cents on his to get his wife some medicine." "But this," replied the stranger, "is quite a different thing. It is a stradivarius—a very fine violin, very rare. Will you sell it to me? I will give you five hundred dollars for it."

"Either you're mocking us, or you are crazy," said poor David. "And I'm no swindler to cheat a poor cracked body, poor as I am." "Wait awhile," cried the gentleman, "You singular old soul, wait; I will bring some one to prove to you my sanity." A way he sped, and returned within an hour with a long-haired German gentleman, who went into raptures over the violin, repeated the name that meant nothing to David, and at last induced him to believe in his friend's sanity. "I'm very loth to part with the fiddle," said Peggy, "but to get a fortune for it tempts me. You can have it." And so, as the storm died away, Peggy and David sat on either side of the table with the money between them, feeling as though a miracle had happened, for they were quite safe from want now until Bob came back; and Peggy could not help saying: "Ah, David, if I'd let you split up the fiddle!" "For once, Peggy," replied David, "you knew best."

Osage Hedge.

A Nebraska correspondent of the Prairie Farmer gives the following as his method of growing and treating an osage hedge which, in the main, is a most sensible mode of management: "A foot apart is, in my judgment, about the right distance to set hedge plants; they grow a little more thrifty set that distance, and it is a little less work to plash it than when it is set closer. Still I think good thorough culture has more to do with the growth of plants than the distance apart. The objection to setting the plants so far apart is that if a plant or two misses there is a hole in the fence. A. D. T.'s assertion that the lateral branches will fill it up to the contrary notwithstanding. If you wish to make the hedges to make a pig-tight fence of it, it is very difficult to get it down close enough to prevent a pig-hole, and if you wish to let it stand as it is, and make a careful fence, in a few years the lower branches will die off and you have a cattle hole. I have had to put holes in a two-foot gap to prevent cattle getting through after the hedge got to be ten or twelve years old. In view of the fact that a hedge-fence is a permanent affair and not a thing that is to be renewed like a post and board fence in a few years and that gaps once made in a hedge by missing plants can seldom if ever be filled to be as good as the balance of the hedge. Set your plants (good thrifty ones) from ten inches to one foot apart; heel in a few of the largest and nicest plants you have to reset with. (They should be covered deep enough so that the sprouts will not come through the ground.) As soon as your hedge is up fill in where plants have missed with those you have heeled in. They will come on nearer together than to wait till next Spring before resetting. Tend the hedge well for two or three years, when it will take care of itself. When six or eight years old plash it carefully trim it two or three times a year."

Curious Chinese Ways.

As the Chinese superstition, a spirit vanishes on hearing the cock crow, just like the ghost of Hamlet's father. The thunder god is believed to kill, being constantly on the lookout for wicked people, the goddess of lightning flashing a mirror on whomsoever the god wishes to destroy. If a child is dangerously ill, its mother goes into the field or garden to call its name, in the hope of bringing back its wandering spirit. At a festival guests may hire substitutes to drink and get pleasantly tipsy for them. Beggars go into a shop and beat a gong so loudly as to prevent customers from being heard, or else they swing about a dead animal tied to the end of a stick. It is only a match of endurance between them and the shop-keeper, who dare not use force to eject them for fear of the law. The Milky Way is called the "Silver River." A coffin is known as "boards of old age," and the shroud as "clothes of old age." "I am drawing near the wood," means "I shall be near my grave." Professor Silvestri, of the Observatory, Etna, has recently made an ascent of that volcano. He finds that the edges of the central crater have undergone considerable change, and the cone last formed has diminished no less than 36 feet. The circumference of the crater was about 1,300 yards previously to the eruption of last year, but it has now increased to 1,800. Many other interesting alterations in the conformation of the mountain were also apparent. It was visited by the Italian Alpine Club from Catania on the 15th of Sept.

Edgar A. Poe.

Poe would have been remarked upon the street. He was of a slighter form than Willis, less mindful of his dress, pale, and with a singularly dark and commanding eye. In a room without a hat, his high, white forehead and intellectual aspect at once distinguished him. His domestic life was believed to be unhappy. It was known that he was poor and lived by his pen, and it was understood he was the victim of strong drink. He died suddenly at Baltimore, and "Dr. Griswold published a memoir of him which his friends and admirers believed to be the false impression of the man, so that he was described as a dis-solute, fantastic writer, who died at Baltimore in consequence of fits of intoxication." Poe was as bitter in commenting upon his contemporaries as Willis was friendly. He defied censure, and expressed a scorn of the public, to which with the instinct of genius, he yet appealed. He went to Boston to read a poem. There was a large audience and great expectation. Poe read some verses written when he was a boy. Boston said that he was drunk. Poe retorted that the poem was good enough for frogpondians. The fact apparently was that he intended to write a poem for the occasion, but was prevented by stress of occupation. In brief preface to the slight volume of his verse. The Raven and other poems, published in Wiley and Putnam's "Library of choice Reading" in 1845 Poe says: "With me, poetry has been, not a purpose, but a passion; and the passions should be held in reverence; they must not—they can not—at will be excited at the more paltry commendations of mankind." This seems to be merely the usual Byronic strain. But it is childish to write for those whose judgment you sneer. If a man writes for the love of writing, he prints because he wishes other people to read what he writes. A man who withdraws as a hermit to Central Park may scoff at mankind, but he is plainly no enamored of solitude. Yet this sneer of Poe's, in the light of the truth now told of his life, was not disdain but unhappiness. The memoir of Griswold really seems to be what Mr. Minto calls it, "a malignant myth," and Mr. Ingram, who had already edited an English edition of Poe's works, was patiently and conclusively disposed of many of the slanders which have pursued the name of the poet. Of many facts in his life the true explanation is very different from the usual version. But it is the greatest service to Poe's memory to show that his dissipation was not the cause of his misfortunes produced his dissipation. This is what Mr. Ingram has done for an American poet whose verse is more justly weighed now than when he was living, and which is not found wanting. —Harper's Magazine.

The Stone Lamb.

A German clergyman tells a story in a very interesting book of his about things which have really happened to him, or which he has met with on his travels. In 1863 he stood, with a little band of travelers, before a beautiful chapel of Werden a der Ruhr, in Germany, waiting for the key to be brought that the door might be unlocked for them to enter. While they waited they saw something on the ledge of the roof, which they found to be a carved stone lamb, and began to wonder what it meant up there. So they asked an old woman who was hobbling along a little way off if she could tell them about it, and she replied "Yes," and related why it had been placed in that strange place. "Many, many years ago," she said, "where that lamb now stands, a man was busy repairing the roof of the chapel, who had to sit in a basket fastened by a rope as he worked. Well, he was working in this manner one day when suddenly the rope which held the basket gave way and he fell down, down from the great height to the ground below. Of course every one who saw the dreadful accident expected that the man would be killed; especially as the ground just there was covered with sharp stones and rocks which the workmen were using for building. But, to their great astonishment, he rose from the ground and stood up quite unharmed! And this was how it happened: A poor lamb had wandered quite up to the side of the chapel in search of the sweet young grass which sprung up among the stones, and the man had fallen exactly on the soft body of this lamb—it had saved his life; for he had escaped with the mere fright and with not so much as a finger broken. But the poor lamb was killed by his heavy fall upon it. So, out of pure gratitude, the man had the stone lamb carved and set up for a lasting memento of his escape from so fearful a death, and of what he owed to the poor lamb. When a girl is twenty she feels very easy on that score. It's only when she scores another that she begins to wonder who invented wrinkles."

The Electric Light.

It is reported that a Boston electrical engineer is about to try the experiment of lighting the large manufacturing center of Holyoke, Mass., with the electric light in a manner that will strike the present generation as novel, but which has been essayed before. It is proposed to erect a tower 75 feet high overlooking the town. This is to be surmounted by a lantern of such illuminating capacity as to put all previous lamps in the category of trifles. At present only one tower will be erected, but if the principle should prove a success, seven or eight will ultimately be built, with a view to render the city as light as day and completely to supersede gas and kerosene. The idea of the inventor of this daring scheme is to charge the upper strata of the atmosphere with luminous vibrations in the same manner as is done by the sun, and thus to produce the same effect that is obtained through the day from the reflected, refracted and dispersed light of that orb. In this manner it is believed that electric light can be made to permeate spaces which are inaccessible to direct rays by the same law by which daylight diffuses itself—that is, by virtue of an expansive property which is constantly illustrated on the large scale of solar illumination, but has no place in our text books on optics. The light given by the solar orb, a few minutes after sunset, when only the upper strata of the atmosphere is directly affected by the solar beam, furnished, perhaps the best example of the diffusion and expansion that our engineer proposes to imitate artificially. His plans provide for an illuminating power from each lantern equal to 300,000 candles, which is nearly twenty times that of any lamp yet manufactured, but is not at all impracticable, as it involves only an increase in the diameter of the carbons. The cost of the tower, lamp and generator for a single light is estimated at $15,000, irrespective of the engine power required to run the latter. Magnificent and brilliant as this conception seems, it has been attempted before, in the infancy of electrical engineering, by a Western experimentalist, who conceived the idea of lighting Cincinnati in a similar manner, by placing enormous lights upon the high ground overlooking the town. This idea was not successful, but possibly the failure was due to the crude electrical engineering of that day, not to any inherent difficulty. To say the least, the result of the Holyoke experiment will be viewed with interest, and if it succeeds Edison must look to his laurels.

Good Advice.

Now that this hunting season is at hand, a few hints to boys how to handle a gun safely, may not be out of place, and may, perhaps, save some from being hurt or fatally injured. Since breech-loading guns have been introduced, muzzle loaders have become very cheap, and in mostly every household of boys over 12 years of age one may be found. A gun should be kept at half-cock. A pull on the trigger or blow on the dog-head will not cause it to go off. If the dog-head should strike something, and cause it to go back, it would remain full-cock, or return to half-cock. Upon no condition should the dog-head be allowed to rest upon the cap. This is the source of the majority of accidents. When the dog-head rests upon the cap the slightest blow upon it will discharge the gun. The carrier of the gun and his comrades are continually in danger of their lives while the gun is in this condition. It is safer, by far, to carry a gun at full-cock than to have the dog-head down upon the cap, as it can only go off by something touching the trigger, which is well protected by the guard. For safety, the muzzle should always be elevated. In climbing a fence, keep the muzzle of the gun more than a foot above the head. Do not pull a gun through the fence. When one or more are in a boat hunting ducks, all the guns should be placed in front of the party in the bow, pointing from him. If the boat is concealed in the marsh, and used to shoot from over decoys, place it sideways, so the parties can shoot side by side. Never shoot over the head of one of your comrades. Having a double-barreled gun, both barrels cocked, and only discharging one barrel, be sure and half-cock the other before loading. Never pull a gun from a wagon or boat with the muzzle towards you. The gun should be raised to a perpendicular, and kept at a safe distance from the head. When capping a gun, hold it in the left hand, the muzzle pointing in the air at an angle of forty-five degrees or more. The writer is not much of a sportsman, although he has handled a gun for thirty years without accident, being instructed by his father at the age of twelve.

"Been Down to Indiana."

Yesterday forenoon, when it became known around the city hall that there was a Detroit in one of the offices who had just got back from Indiana, there was a rush of politicians anxious to hear how matters stood in that State. "How does Hancock stand?" asked one. "How does Garfield?" queried a second. Each of the dozen men around him had some query, pertaining to politics. "Yes, I've been down to Indiana," calmly replied the individual, as he tipped his chair back. "I was in 16 different counties, and I heard a great many opinions expressed. "What majority will Hancock get?" "Hancock! You mean Garfield," said the other. "Yes, I heard a good many opinions expressed," continued the man; "and the excitement in every town was at fever heat. "Hurrah for Hancock!" "Hurrah for Garfield!" "Yes, I heard a great deal of hurrahing. You people up here have no idea of the hard work being done down there by both sides. On every railroad train I found—" "A majority for Hancock!" "For Garfield!" "On every railroad train I found men canvassing the political situation," said the man. "Yes, but what did the leaders seem to think?" "I didn't talk with any of the leaders." "Well, what was the drift?" "It didn't drift." "What we want to know," said a ward leader, as he pushed to the front, "is your unbiased opinion, based upon what you heard and saw down there, as to how Indiana will go next week." "Well, sir, I—" "Keep back there!" yelled a man. "Keep still yourself!" said another. "We want your unbiased opinion," said a third. "Well, I went down to Indiana. I saw my grandmother die, I buried her. I was in the very center of the political excitement, and I heard prominent men in both parties say that—" "You heard em say what? Give us what they said!" "I heard them say that my grandmother made the first soft cap in Central Indiana." "Ah, gentlemen, she was a good old soul, and you who have had grandmothers will surely excuse my emotion." He put down his head to conceal his tears, and 13 men got out of that on the gallop and left him alone. —Detroit Free Press.

Adelaide Proctor.

One day Charles Dickens, as he sat in the office of All the Year Round, making his way through the mass of papers that lay on his table, was attracted and surprised by the singular merit of some lines which had been sent him. Such a discovery is always a refreshment to an editor, as he wades among the sloughs of manuscripts which surround him, and he glanced eagerly at the name with which the verses were signed. It was "Mary Berwick." Dickens had never before, to his knowledge, either heard this name or seen it in print, but there was the ring of true poetry in Mary Berwick's lines, be she whom she might, and so they were inserted in the next number of the magazine. Months went on, and All the Year Round had frequent contributions of Miss Mary Berwick among its contents. Dickens, however, knew simply nothing about her, except that she wrote a legible hand, that he always by her own wish addressed all communications to her to a certain circulating library in the west of London, and that when he sent her a check she acknowledged it promptly, but in a very short, matter-of-fact way. At length, one Winter evening, when Dickens went to dine with the Proctors, he happened to put in his pocket, to show them, the Christmas number of All the Year Round, which was just coming out. He called their attention especially to what he said was a very pretty poem by Miss Mary Berwick. The author of "Pickwick" remarked, to his astonishment, that these simple words of his were received by the whole family with much suppressed merriment. He could not in the least make out what was in the wind, but he took it good naturedly, supposing it to be some home Christmas joke, and asked no questions. Next day the mystery of the unaccountable mirth of last night was cleared up in a letter from Barry Cornwall to Dickens. Mary Berwick was Adelaide Proctor. And from that time forward Miss Proctor took an acknowledged place among the English poetesses. —The Argosy.

PUGET SOUND ARGUS.

One of the largest torchlight processions ever seen in Oregon, paraded the streets of Portland on Tuesday evening of last week, which was comprised principally of republican clubs and organizations of that city and vicinity. It is estimated there were three thousand voters in line. After marching, the procession proceeded to the public square, where rousing speeches were made by several of the best republican orators in the state. In the line were a number of prominent citizens, who have heretofore acted with the democratic party, but now declare themselves for Garfield and Arthur. The republicans of Oregon are very enthusiastic, and will carry the State by a heavy majority.

"We have been shown a letter written by President Hayes on the 14th inst., in which he says 'From all I can learn my judgment is that Governor Ferry has administered the duties of his office with conscientious ability and success. Indeed if I had known all that I now know I would have tendered him a re-appointment at the end of his second term.' This was written the day before the President left the Territory and after he had visited all portions of it, conversed with our people and made himself familiar with Governor Ferry's whole administration. This endorsement by the President must be very gratifying to all those who recommended the re-appointment of Governor Ferry."—"Courier."

Put Whatcom County down for at least 150 majority for Brents and the republican ticket. The usual majority is about one hundred but the indications are that it will be nearer two hundred this time. Last time the total vote on the Delegateship was 811. This year it will be over one thousand—probably twelve hundred. King is the only county on the Sound that leads Whatcom, and if that county doesn't look out for her laurels, she will not lead us much in the next Republican Convention. —La Conner "Mail."

Two More Steamers. Mr. Henry Villard, President of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, telegraphed Mr. T. F. Oakes, the Vice President of the Company, yesterday, that he has closed the contract with John Roach & Son, of Chester, Pa., for two coal and freight steamers 335 feet long, 40 foot beam, 23 foot depth. Carrying capacity 3,000 tons. These steamers will reach the Pacific coast next summer and be mainly employed in the Puget Sound coal trade, that is, between Seattle and San Francisco and Seattle and Portland.—"Oregonian."

The citizens of Moscow and vicinity, in Northern Idaho, held a meeting on the 5th of October, at which they fully endorsed the doings of their Lewiston neighbors on the 28th and 29th of September, in relation to annexation to Washington Territory. They instructed their Delegates, both Democratic and Republican, to do all in their power to further the objects set forth at the Lewiston meetings. Northern Idaho is for annexation, without regard to party, and no opposition in this matter will be brooked.

President Hayes will reach Fremont, Ohio, his home, in time to vote for Garfield and Arthur. General Grant will be at Galena to vote for the same ticket. It is in the nature of a rarity for Presidents and ex-Presidents to be voting for their successors. This for the reason that but few of them live long enough after the expiration of their terms to vote in a Presidential year.

W. H. WHITE, who has been lecturing for Mr. Burke, came home suddenly after hearing the results of the Ohio and Indiana election.

The November "Californian" is at hand. It is certainly attractive. Joaquin Miller's article on "the new Napoleon," (Jay Gould) is fascinating. Its sketches and poems and stories are all of the best, and equal to the average in the highest toned magazine of the land. It would be well for the people if in every family the "Californian" was to be found.

The political delusion is the blindest of all delusions. There are Democrats who still hopefully claim the election of Gen. Hancock. Also that of Judge Burke. Deluded as they may be, they are, however, sufficiently discreet to risk nothing in support of their wild assertions.
