Sunday's Thoughtful Hours. When we think how soon we must pass away, And think of the days that are gone; Remembering the coming sunset, We too must remember the morn; But the sun will set, the day will close, And an end will come to all our woes.

A HARD FIGHT IN 1856.

About the last of May in 1856, a well-equipped command of soldiers under Lieutenant Colonel Steptoe broke camp at The Dalles, Or., and took up their line of march for the Walla Walla Valley, 180 miles distant. The expedition consisted of six companies of the Ninth United States Infantry, one battery of the Third Artillery and one troop of the First Dragoons. The first named regiment had just reported on the coast, being newly created by Act of Congress in 1855. They were armed with the splendid Minie rifle, and from their proficiency in the skirmish or light infantry drill, were dubbed the "Sianghais."

Colonel George Wright of the Ninth Infantry now took command of the steamer and what infantry could be stowed away were rushed upon the deck; also, the artillery company, with two mounted howitzers, were put on board. A large, leaky scow was made fast alongside and into this the dragoons, with horses and equipments, crowded. Thus, in four short hours from the time the courier reached our camp, miles away, the little Mary was rounding out into the broad Columbia with the principle part of the force of the camp contained. In those days travel was slow by any route in the far West, so at the end of our first day's trip we were yet ten miles from our destination, forty-five miles from our starting point. A bivouac was made and the journey resumed in about time to fetch us to the Cascades at daybreak. Eyes were now strained and heads inclined in listening attitude as we approached the shore. The first attraction was the firing of guns and waving of flags from Bradford's store, where quite a party of whites were held in barricade by the hostiles. This demonstration had hardly greeted us when a volley from the forest lined bank told us the Redskins were awaiting us also. Now as the cavalry were, by bad luck, on the side nearest the shore, their consternation can be imagined. Quickly, however, the little boat's nose was buried in the mud and every man sprang ashore. Soon four of them were picked up and further on another, lying prone beside a half-empty whisky barrel, a miserable victim of intemperance. He received no opportunity to take the pledge. Onward the skirmishers swept, over the fallen logs, through the dense brush, never halting till comrades' voices at the block-house told us they still held the fort. This small detachment had been stationed here at the centre of the portage regularly for some months and suffered the first onslaught of the Indians, losing one of their number; but they kept them at bay for some thirty hours, although they numbered six against more than one hundred. Soon a spirited firing was heard still on toward the lower portage. This proved to be the skirmishers commanded by Lieutenant Phil Sheridan, who, with his usual energy, was driving the hostiles from that vicinity.

The action of the military from The Dalles above and the garrison of Vancouver below was simultaneous; so the Redskins were compelled to face by a whole section they had contemplated devastating and which they had rendered quite undesirable for settlement for some years. A system of scouring the brush by skirmishers was kept up for several days, until the enemy could no longer be found or heard. Many unglorious and serious mishaps occurred among the raw soldiers, especially at night, when burnt stumps and black bowlders were easily clothed with blankets and other savage semblances. A remnant of the war party was captured on an island just below the middle rapids, to which refuge they were chased with much difficulty and danger. The able-bodied buck, numbering eight, were very promptly hanged by order of our commander, after an examining trial by a commission of officers. They all met their death stoically, with the exception of one burly and powerful fellow, who so excited the ire of an eccentric lieutenant that the latter discharged the contents of his revolver into the body while it was swinging from the scaffold. The dragoons were kept constantly busy after the fighting ended in hunting up the victims of the slaughter. All were finally found, numbering about twenty-three. Several instances of barbarity were disclosed in our search and traces of desolation were abundant. I am, however, happy to say since this trouble the peaceful dwellers in the shadows of those gigantic mountains have not been again disturbed by the savages.

The troops remained at the Cascades until the fall, when they blockaded landing, where the diminutive steamer Mary Ann awaited our arrival. This little boat was somewhat tragic part in the affair now being narrated. She lay tied to the bank at her usual mooring when the courier attacked the whites. The crew, consisting of Captain Baughman and two others, being on shore, endeavored to regain the steamer. The engineer was shot; the two others rapidly cast off the line and trusting to the effort to make steam, soon placed themselves in a position to go over the rapids, preferring that means of destruction to the tomahawk. Fortune favored them, however, and the Mary swung broadside against an island on the farther side, where she rested in security till she got in readiness, when she made for The Dalles at her highest speed. One of the two aboard was wounded in the final brave attempt to escape.

Life is in a great degree what we make it. And how shall we succeed if we pass by, heedlessly, life's precious opportunities?—little opportunities of doing good, little lessons that may at present seem unimportant, help materially to lay the foundation for a great and useful life. Facilities for exercising an influence over others are so many and so great that it is difficult to conceive how two persons may sit side by side without impressions on some minds which will never be erased. And this influence and constancy has often great power; a single instance of advice, reproof, caution or encouragement, may decide the question of a man's respectability, usefulness and happiness for a life time. How important, then, that we improve every opportunity to make our life a blessing to others.

How important, then, that we improve every opportunity to make our life a blessing to others.

Feeding and Breeding.

No thinking man will need be told that feeding and breeding are intimately connected; and yet it is perfectly reasonable to suppose that the majority of men seldom consider them together. At least it is a fact that there is a great deal of very bad breeding as the direct result of very bad feeding. In our swine breeding we have no doubt whatever that much damage has been done through an injudicious system of feeding. The disposition which we have manifested to force our hogs in order to make them perfect pictures to the eye—a course that has led us into feeding a class of food which did not contain all the elements necessary for the perfect development of the animal system—has undoubtedly resulted in a decrease of constitutional vigor and an urgent invitation to disease. We do not pretend to say that this is the sole cause of what we term "hog cholera," but we do not hesitate to say that it is a cause. It cannot be expected that an imperfectly developed dam or sire can breed a perfect offspring. In the human family the children of consumptive parents, for instance, know only too well what their dangers are, and weak, sickly parents have weak, sickly children, as a rule. It is true the doctrine of prepotency will operate here, and it may require generations of degeneration, before the offspring will be a total wreck. But prepotency cannot wholly overcome individual imperfections. These imperfections will begin to stamp their impress upon the first generation, although, perhaps, to such a slight degree that they may be scarcely discernible. But they will become more and more conspicuous in each succeeding generation until the power of prepotency is lost and the animal is scarcely a shadow of its breed.

We must give special attention, therefore, to individual merits. It makes no difference what the breed is, if the animal has been carelessly bred or injured by neglect or improper management, we do not want it for a breeder. Whatever the pedigree of an animal may be, if it is not itself a good animal, and fairly represented in its own make-up, of what we would like to have in our herd. Not that it might not produce a good offspring, but the point is that selection of breeding animals, therefore, will necessitate much inquiry into the methods of feeding, and to maintain the standard of our breeds will necessitate our adoption of a perfect system of feeding. Has the animal been improperly fed, for instance, so as to develop one part of the system to the neglect of the other? Has it been fattening from almost its birth, and showing other signs of overfeeding? If so it is not a perfect animal. Such an animal is a standing invitation to the attacks of disease. It is like a beautiful house without any foundation, and its offspring will inherit some degree of constitutional weakness. Has the animal been starved? If it has been there is but one result—an impairment of its natural vigor. The animal system cannot be left without proper nourishment, and maintain a perfect condition. It is a plain and defiant violation of nature's laws and no natural law can be violated without entailing permanent injury. But no one need be told that a poorly fed dam cannot produce a good offspring. The dam must be kept in good condition. There is little difference in practical results between a poorly fed dam and a highly fed dam. The death of the offspring is the frequent result of feeding to high, especially of the heating, fat producing foods. "What causes pigs to die?" is quite a frequent inquiry, and the majority of cases the proper reply is "too much corn."

If we would have good, strong, healthy animals, therefore, this subject of feeding must be kept constantly in view. It may be said to be the question in breeding. Every bone and muscle in the body must be kept supplied with sufficient nourishment. There is no need whatever of making an animal fat, until we get ready to fit it for the butcher's block. But there is need of keeping the frame work in good order, for that means harmonious development and harmonious development means health and constitutional vigor.—Western Rural.

A contract has been made by President Groves for the planting of 2,000,000 trees in the valley of Mexico, within the four years beginning March 15, 1884. The trees to be planted are designated as ash, willow, poplar, eucalyptus, ironjapane, 90,000 mountain cypress cedar, acacia, and miscellaneous varieties. For compensation the contractor receives $200,000. At a sale of United States coins in New York, the naked bust, Washington cent of 1792, unreticulated and with proof surface, brought $14.00. The half dollar of the same date was sold for $72, and another specimen of the 1792 cent, of which there are several varieties, was knocked down at $55. For the Washington trial piece $45 was paid, and several other coins and tokens of the same series realized good prices. The confederate cent, one of the original specimens struck in nickel, went for $10.25.

Coal-Oil Johnny's Luck.

J. William McNulty, better known as Johnny Steele, or "Coal-oil Johnny," who made a large fortune during the oil-fever and squandered it almost as fast as he made it, turned up in Harrisburg, Pa., on the Fourth. He said that he had come to the capital to celebrate, and that he was at present working in McCormick's mills, in New Cumberland. He pulled out a bundle of papers from his pocket, and handing one of them to an auditor, said it was a claim to the Continental hotel in Philadelphia, for which he had paid $40,000 in his wealthy days. He asserted that the hotel would again come into his possession. The paper read right enough, and bears the earmarks of age also.

He further said that he was prospecting in New Cumberland, sinking shafts for copper and iron. He showed some ores which he said came from the shafts in which he was experimenting. He expressed his confidence that he would become as wealthy as Vanderbilt yet. Being asked where his family was he said that they were in Waymart, and added that he had recently sent them $25,000. He had been in Williamsport, he said, about six months and happened to be at the Crawford house. Somebody was talking about a package containing $25,000, "left there by a fellow named Coal-oil Johnny about '65 or '66," to remain there until called for. He went to the bank, and succeeded, after some difficulty in establishing his identity, in obtaining the money.

Coal-oil Johnny is still quite attractive in appearance. His face is pleasant and genial, and well browned by the sun and weather. His eyes are blue, and he wears side-whiskers in the English fashion. His clothes are old fashioned and well made to heavy for the weather. Bundles of papers hung loosely out of his pocket.

He is now about thirty-nine years of age, and possesses considerable intelligence, being able to write his name legibly, a feat he could not perform in the days of his prosperity. He is hunting for evidence to get back some of the money which was illegally taken away from him. When the oil fever broke out in northern Pennsylvania, about twenty-two years ago, McNulty owned himself, which he had cleared for himself. Strangers came one day and began to prospect around the neighborhood. What was ordinary in appearance to him was very extraordinary to them. The peculiar look of the water was familiar to him. He had seen the sight often, and did not mind it. To the strangers it was hidden treasure. The more they looked over the farm the more they were attracted to the spot. McNulty, however, was not a man to let himself be possessed by $25,000,000. His farm of twenty acres composed the heart of the newly-discovered oil field, and from that time forth he became known as "Coal-oil Johnny."

This turned his head. His reckless extravagances are a matter of history. He scattered money around and began to prospect around the neighborhood. What was ordinary in appearance to him was very extraordinary to them. The peculiar look of the water was familiar to him. He had seen the sight often, and did not mind it. To the strangers it was hidden treasure. The more they looked over the farm the more they were attracted to the spot. McNulty, however, was not a man to let himself be possessed by $25,000,000. His farm of twenty acres composed the heart of the newly-discovered oil field, and from that time forth he became known as "Coal-oil Johnny."

Bill Nye's New Version.

It came to pass that a certain railroad man sent forth his servants to call them that were hidden to the wedding and they would not come. Again he sent forth other servants, saying, tell those which are hidden, behold, I have killed the oxen and prepared the wedding dinner and opened a keg of nuts and all things are ready for the banquet. But they made light of it and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his drug store and another to his grist-mill, and the remainder took the servants and treated them spitefully, and put a tin can on them, and frescoed them with Michael Angelo eggs.

But when the railroad king heard of it he bunched the entire outfit and sent them to the mill and the grist-mill and the drug store and the remainder took the servants and treated them spitefully, and put a tin can on them, and frescoed them with Michael Angelo eggs. Then he said unto his servants, the wedding is ready, but they which are hidden are not worthy. Go ye, therefore, down the side-tracks and into the round houses and the water tanks and the cabooses and the gravel trains and gather together as many as ye shall find tell them to come over to the wedding feast and fill themselves up. And the servants went forth and rounded up as many as they could find, both good and bad, and bade them to the feast.

And when the king went into the reception room he found there a man who had not on a spunk tail coat and low-necked shoes and clocked socks. And he said unto him: "Fardner, how comest that thou art here without any store clothes on, and wearing instead a linen duster and Jim-crow raiment generally?" And the man was at first speechless, but he answered yet again: "I know that I am here without a wedding garment; but behold I am a railroad conductor on thy line, and I have reformed and ceased to 'knock down,' and behold thy servant is poor, and he is trying to live on his salary."

And the king was wroth and told the usher to gather him in and take him by the slack of his raiment and cast him over the outer wall, and when he was weeping and gnashing of teeth he said: "I would that I were as poor as the man who is here without a wedding garment."

Cannon Burst.

From the Watcom Reville: The old Farragut cannon that rendered valuable service in the Indian war on the Sound many, many years ago, and for the past twenty-five years has remained in peaceful quietude at this place, utilized only for saluting purposes, has finally acknowledged its inability, in consequence of extreme old age, to keep up the boom, and on the morning of the Fourth, after the third salute had been fired, resolved upon a final dissolution and withdrawal from further service. In other words, the cannon burst, and its several fragmentary parts, each of which would weigh from 50 to 200 pounds, were hurled through the air in every direction with terrible violence. The Lummi, Nooksack and Samish Indians, about 300 in number, had pitched their tents and tepees on the beach directly below the brow of the hill on which the cannon had, several days previous, been placed. One fragment weighing at least 100 pounds was hurled a few rods north, passed through a tent and struck a Lummi Indian, killing him almost instantly. Another piece passed southward, tearing the knee-cap off and otherwise horribly mauling the leg of an aged Samish. No one else was injured. This act had a depressing effect on the Indians, and for a time at least, gave promise of trouble. Through the intercessions, however, of Chief Henry of the Lummi tribes, all feelings of hostility were allayed. Liberal contributions in cash were made by the citizens for the purpose of defraying burial expenses, etc. Owing to extreme old age and feeble health, the wounded Indian cannot possibly survive the injuries inflicted. This cannon is a piece brought in 1858, and placed in the stockade on the brow of the hill, a locality now occupying the central portion of the city, for the protection of the settlers against invasion by the war-like tribes that infested this country at that time. It has a history that is indeed interesting, but lack of sufficient data precludes a further mention of it at present.

The total production of the precious metals in California in 1882 is estimated at $17,445,000, of which $845,000 was silver and the remainder gold. Montana has produced $200,000,000 in precious metals. New York City has doubled its population once in 17 years.

SCRAPINGS.

July 28th. Local on 4th page. One more month of summer. The change of time took effect Thursday.

The real estate transactions are crowded out. The St. Charles Hotel is again in operation.

Work has commenced on the public square. The minister troupe had a car load of baggage.

The iron on the First National Bank is just too hot. The style of weather this week was still summerish but somewhat tempered.

A new dwelling is under way on Sprague street, just east of the M. E. Church. The foundation of Brown's new block has taken its place among the things that are.

Several new residences are helping the looks of the city on the south side of the main street.

W. Kohlhoff is preparing to build a large front addition to his residence south of the main street.

Real Estate Agent Abelson has some choice specimens of grain on exhibition at the fair.

The California House has out an elegant new sign. Jas. McCoy did it with his little brush.

"We are a warrior bold," is a refrain that is passed around among the three gentlemen named LeVie.

A gentleman named LeVie is putting up a building on Post street in the rear of the California House.

Webster brothers will probably be able to occupy their new quarters on Riverside street next week.

French streets down to his new brick every day and helps on the work by wishing it was completed.

A coat of white wash materially improves the looks of the F. M. Moore warehouse near the depot.

The planking has been run up shutting the inside of the new house opposite the Baptist church from view.

OUR KNOWLEDGE FACTORY.

The New Building in which Young Ideas are to be Trained. "The education forms the common mind."

It is evident from the natural geographical position of Spokane Falls, considering the present and prospective position of the greater body of settlers in the Northwest, that this is to be the chief educational center of a large section of territory.

The railroad company having withdrawn their newly surveyed lots from the market, residence property across the track will immediately fall in price.

A good dinner at Charles Carson's on Sunday. Chicken and oyster soup, trout and salmon, hot turkeys, ducks, young chickens, prairie chickens, mushrooms, and all the little necessities that go to make up a dinner.

There is a good deal of the lumber used in the construction of the new building at this house as good as can be had in the Northwest.

If you have occasion to go to Medical Lake, do not fail to stop at the Cottage House, run by the prime of tavern keeping, W. H. Holm.

The Marshal was called upon Thursday last to assist in the removal of a couple of the female inmates in a revolution.

A number of the boys were out passing around a ball the other day. We took a boat of about half a dozen boys and surprised to find it had not sailed any further.

If the express agent, railroad agent and others who are required to be on hand at the arrival of the train, they should be against the habit they would be tempted to deal in some petty still expressions.

Harry Yekaver completed taking the school census last Friday, and the total number of children in the city is 2,900.

Last night some of our influential citizens and Mr. K. to keep right on to the present, and although there is nothing to be done, yet we are not to be discouraged.

The railroad boys have been getting some exciting experience in the past few days through burning timber and wood fires.

The United States army was almost demoralized last week by the desertion of a large number of soldiers.

The drunkard man we have seen in the territory since the office early Tuesday morning. There was no exuberant, but a regular old skin full work.

A field trial of Self-Binders took place on the farm of A. P. Price, three miles east of Farmington, July 22nd, 1888.

THE PALOUSE COUNTRY.

A Trip to a Great Grain Producing Section. From Spokane Falls to Steptoe Station the distance by the California road is 50 miles.

Station the distance by the California road is 50 miles, and the trip on a bright July day, with a cool breeze, is perhaps one of the most attractive to be found in the territory.

The country through which we pass possesses many attractions. The drive through the palouse of the Hangeun alone is one to be remembered.

Leaving behind the charming little city of Spokane Falls, in the distance is heard the rumbling of its mighty waters, and following the Hangeun, that crystal stream, with its beautiful willow and pine fringed banks.

It is an indication of the American spirit of advancement, the desire on the part of parents to have their children reap the benefits of an education and keep step with the progression of the age.

When the Northern Pacific road is opened for travel Spokane Falls will be visited by many first-class troops, and one of our greatest advantages will be a higher grade of schools in the past, but we are now on the eve of a new era in our school history.

In the present article we will barely mention the fact that several of the finest and best colleges in the territory are about to be constructed in the city.

As we arise to look again over this beautiful plain, in which nature has so much excelled in her great handiwork. To look over and through this valley, on every side, a gradual ascent to the hill tops, covered with the most charming vegetation.

When finished the Spokane Falls public school will be second to none in appearance east of Portland. The greatest care has been taken for the comfort and convenience of the children and teachers in charge.

The building is to be of frame fronting to the north. In the front and center of the main building is a projecting L forming the entrance to the school, which surmounts the roof of the bell tower.

Entering by an easy and short flight of stairs one enters a hall from which ascends three flight of stairs to the upper story, that gives fine and easy entrance and exit to the building.

Two cloak rooms 6-9x12 and 6-9x8. Two roomy wood closets and a private reception, or recreation, room 8-6x9. On the second floor, likewise two school rooms 24-8x32, a private room 10-8x7, wood closet 7x9, two cloak rooms 3-6x7 and 1x7, and an ample hall.

Black boards, platforms and the necessary paraphernalia will be in keeping with the exterior and interior appearance of the house. The greatest care will be taken in the construction, particular attention being paid to ventilation, and the general comfort of those to occupy the premises.

ON THE WARPATH!

A Threatened Indian Outbreak that Failed to Outbreak! The Brave Spokaneite Shoulders the Little Gun and Looks at Bloodthirsty.

"Grim Visaged War has Smoothed his Wrinkled Front." "The King of France with full ten thousand men, with a hill, and then marched back."

If there is anything that will make the calm blood in one's veins awake suddenly to life and go jingling through his system like a string of sleigh bells on a fast-running, or make the cold chills play leap frog up his back bone, or make his hair wiggle in spite of himself, or cause a weakness at the pit of the stomach as though kicked with a cramp, or break a man up generally it is a startling report that the cruel, heartless, vengeful savages have moved out somewhere so near his residence as to be almost in reach of his scalp, and are ruthlessly murdering men, women and children and applying the torch with a disgusting disregard to the destroying power of that element.

It makes a man wish he was a thousand miles removed from Indians, or that the Lord had never invented that species of the human race. The Indian is not a pleasant member of society any way you take him, but when he is attired in his war costume consisting of a pair of moccasins and a scalping knife, he is not a creature that you would freely and of your own accord take by the hand and introduce among your friends and entertain. Just at that season in his life when he is most dangerous, he is then ripe, and it is at that very interesting period when the average man wants just as little to do with him as he can get.

LOCAL.

OF HIS BASE.

Saturday last an individual boiling over with gin and a bad disposition came upon the observation of Marshal Hyde, and that eyesore to the toughened tough lounded offender to morality and law into the town cooler. Toward night the victim of a crooked appetite was permitted to go out into the bright world with the understanding that he would shake the dust of the city from his raiment, and walk hence, and stretch his legs over country roads, and drink in the mountain breezes, and sniff the dry fragrance of new hay, and make himself exceedingly scarce generally. Forgetting his promise before leaving the shadow of the jail, he scattered himself around the streets, and in the evening walked into the law office of Hyde & Stoll, occupied a chair and made himself at home. The Marshal and Mr. Stoll were present, but as the intruder showed none of his bad traits at the time, no attention was paid to his presence. When it came time to close the institution for the night Mr. S. intimated that his absence just at the time would be conducive of much pleasure than his continued presence. The stranger differed, and continued to fill the chair with a continue that threatened to last all night. Becoming tired of the encroachment and not exactly appreciating the familiarity Stoll reached out and gently laid his fin upon the individual's shoulder, and the intention of hastening his exit. The intention was very good but poorly executed in this instance, for the party bounced to his feet with an agile bounce and seizing a chair threatened to telescope Mr. Stoll's vertebrae. The young man, somewhat surprised, retreated in good order. At this juncture the Marshal arose to exercise his authority, but the infuriated ease faced the twinkling of the star without a falter and exhibited a disposition to reduce the strength of the officer by knocking his joints together. Hyde unlimbered his artillery in the smallest possible fraction of a moment, and the annihilator found himself suddenly looking into the yawning chasm of a self-cocking ball-dog. This brought hostilities to a standstill, and while the brains were trying to make up his mind whether to commit suicide by continuing, or take the longer method of skipping out and gradually drinking himself to death, the Marshal rushed in and grappled with the assailant, pistol in hand. The brief exhibit of Greco-Roman wrestling was exceedingly exciting. There was a nudge of legs, arms and body tangled together while the glittering barrel of the gun swung around to every point of the compass. Seeing the officer embrace his prey, Mr. Stoll rushed in to the rescue, but just as he was about to sit down upon the cause of all the commotion his eye fell upon the pistol, the muzzle of which sternly threatened to spit his shrapnel by blowing his legs off, and the rescuer hopped out of the room with such an intense desire to reach cover that he almost knocked the door jamb off. Succumbing to the inevitable the stranger concluded to vamoose, and with many maledictions plodded off. He secured a room in the California House and retired, but "nature's soft nurse" refused to come to time, and becoming incensed with his luck in wooing the drowsy god, he started out for more adventures. In the office he made himself obnoxious, and a massacre ensued. The clerk was treated to a dish of knuckles on the half-shell and went down to make a close inspection of the flooring, and the warrior turned himself loose on the warpath. Night watchman Kohlhoff and a pair of assistants buckled into the war, and things pertaining to the wonderful construction of man filled the air for a moment, when the stranger was at last hand-cuffed and again stored safely away in the Hotel de Hyde. It is evident that the fellow was laboring under an attack of Jim Jams, the truth being that he has been but recently released from the asylum. Mr. Kohlhoff tells us that the prisoner imagines that creatures of his diseased mind were coming to him, and talked in a manner to make a sane man wish he was locked in his house and stored away safely under blankets. It is probably that he will again occupy rooms at Stellicoom at an early day.

LABORERS LABOR.

When a man once sets himself to work to accomplish a certain object there is no telling what his ingenuity can devise. There are persons who spend the best years of their lives in the construction of some complicated piece of mechanism, which, when completed, is only a curiosity which attracts the passing attention of the "common herd" and may excite a momentary wonder in thinking, calculating, investigating spirits for years afterwards. From the small reward that those geniuses receive for the product of their hands and brains it often strikes us that it is labor thrown away, although there must be a deep satisfaction and a consciousness of some superior trait in those who have by dexterity given to the world specimens of workmanship that defy imitations. One of the most complicated, minute and delicate specimens of this class of handwork that has ever come under our observation is two large pictures, made entirely from human hair, representing Gen. Washington and Gen. Sherman. The artistic work is the result of twelve years of experiment and labor by Mr. Chas. Streib, one of our resident barbers having a shop at the corner of Main and Mill streets. The pictures are the result of an idea that struck Mr. Streib some dozen or more years ago, and with a perseverance and delicacy of sight and touch almost marvelous has he accomplished the herculean and almost impossible task. The picture of Sherman represents him on horseback, with hat in hand, and required 55 shades of hair. While the face is not a perfect representation of the General, the resemblance is striking, and would be recognized at once. The picture of Washington is more complicated. The General stands in the foreground, while his charger is held by a servant in uniform. A well-executed tree trunk is to the right, and on the ground is a broken wheel, cannon and cussion. The rocks are very well done, while the entire picture is carefully finished. It required 90 shades of hair for this picture. Some idea may be formed of the nicety of the labor when it is understood that the hair is cut by hand as fine as sand, the place to which the necessary shade was to be applied was coated with glue or mullage, and the hair put on. The greatest care had to be exercised, as the misplacement of a shade would spoil the effect, and an error could not be rectified as it can in an oil painting. The different colors are blended together in perfect harmony, and the longer one examines the picture the more he wonders how in the world the work was ever accomplished. The shades of hair are so nearly alike in many instances that to a common eye the difference cannot be recognized. The most minute objects have been faithfully carried out. The trappings of the horse, the buttons on the coat, the hilts of the swords, and every trifling minutiae has been portrayed. Looking at the picture and then examining the material, of which he keeps a large quantity in separate vials, a person is not surprised at the length of time devoted on the work, the only wonder being that Mr. Streib could have finished it in that time. We doubt if there exists in America to-day anything to compare with these pictures in delicacy of workmanship, and we believe that at some time they will become as great a curiosity as the wonderful clock at Strasburg.

PRIME STOCK.

If all farmers should turn their attention to raising a superior breed of stock they would find it far more profitable and satisfactory than fooling away their time on the poor, scrawny, inferior animals so common about the barn yard, and in a little time the improved breed would not cost a cent more to keep. That practical and successful rancher, Francis H. Cook, who, by the way, is a graduate from a printing office and the editor's desk, is one of those who believes in model farming, not only as regards the product of the soil, but also the quality of the stock there on, and he never lets an opportunity slip by to experiment in its various ramifications, whereby he is to be benefited by the same. He is gradually gathering together on his place the best of everything pertaining to the farm. He sends to the remotest part of the land for choice seeds, cuttings, roots and live stock. The land that he owns will grow anything indigenous to the temperate zone, and in a few years his place will yield an abundance of the very best farm and garden produce that is grown anywhere. In the garden line his samples include some of the rarest vegetables and small fruit cultivated anywhere. His seed grains are chosen with the greatest care. His apiary contains stands of the best bees known to bee keepers, having recently received a colony of the highly prized Italian bees direct from New York City. Saturday Mr. Cook received direct from L. B. Silk, a breeder and dealer in fine stock, at Cleveland, Ohio, a pair of improved Ohio Chester White hogs. They were just old enough to take from the parent, costing Mr. C. $85, the express on the box being $65. Hugs though they are they are fine looking stock, very large and heavy for their age and promising to make heavy porkers one of these days. The Chester White is considered to be among the best for pork now raised, and the Ohio breed is even superior to the common species. The expense of getting them here was heavy, but Mr. Cook will be remunerated through that source many fold before many years.

ALMOST A FIRE.

Saturday evening when the freight from the east had pulled in to this station a brakeman's oily nerves were titillated by the odor of fire, and going over the train he was startled to discover a threatening wreath of smoke crawling upward from a car load of lumber. He immediately notified the force and by a dexterous use of muscle and water a part of the lumber was thrown off and the incipient flame extinguished. It is probable that the fire caught from a spark from the locomotive, and had the train traveled a couple of miles farther the draft thus created would have given the flame such a head way that the entire car, and probably others, would have been destroyed. As it was a hole was burned through the floor of the flat car and a number of boards were scorched. The loss amounts to nothing. The lumber was consigned to Havermale & Davis.

A WIDERTHIE.

It will be remembered, if the reader pays attention to the particular paragraph, that in the proceedings of the City Council, as published last week, that a proposition to grade Front street was favorably entertained, only a feeling manifested itself to grade only a portion of the highway the full width. This suggestion was opposed with a lusty oppose by the petitioners, and so the Street and Alley Committee have had instructions to put a surveyor on, make an estimate of the amount of rock to be removed and advertise for bids for doing the said work. It is the intention to grade Front street its full length, which, if done will make it one of the finest public streets in the city. The improvement will cost money on account of the superabundance of stone opposite the Western Hotel, but when it is done right once it is finished forever.
