By HENRY S. WASHINGTON.
Fence, my soul! a week hath ended—
One the less for thee below.
In this week there hath been blended
Hope and fear, and joy and woe;
Wary heart, thou canst not murmur,
For thy stay a bow is cast;
One week to the haven nearer,
Courage gather thou the past.

Fence, my soul! a week hath ended:
What's its record borne for thee?
Whom oppressed hast thou befriended?
Who the happier been for thee?
Hast thou loved for love's sake?
To thy neighbor work thou true?
What, my soul, hast thou neglected?
What performed thou shouldst not do?

Co-Education of the Sexes.

We have been asked to write an article on the necessity of the separation of the sexes in our public schools; but as our opinions are quite decided on this point, we shall proceed to give our reasons for their co-education. We believe that the presence of boys and girls in the same school, far from being injurious to either sex, exerts a mutually beneficial influence. Our belief is based on many years experience in public school teaching, on an extended observation of schools, and on the opinion of the most enlightened and progressive educators.

If we consider the manner in which boys and girls are brought together in well regulated public schools, it will enable us better to meet objections. The schoolhouses, in all the cities and larger towns, have separate yards and playgrounds, on the opposite sides of the schoolroom by separate doors. In the schoolroom they meet at hours of intermission, as well as of study, only under the eye of the teacher. The only opportunity of meeting, when not under the observation of the teacher, is on the way to and from school. If the mere sight of a boy is dangerous to innocence, then our girls should be sent off to convents, where they may grow up in blissful ignorance of the existence of boys. If a pretty face and an occasional salutation of "good morning" is sufficient to turn the heads of our boys, then protect them by all means from such witchery.

The charge of positive immorality, both in thought and act, is frequently brought against the public schools by their open enemies, and not unfrequently by grand moral reformers, who profess to be friendly. There are some who have no faith in the purity of youth of either sex. They believe in total depravity to the letter. They look upon all association of boys and girls, or men and women as merely animal instinct of the baser kind. They are the moral scavengers, who delight to rake up out of the gutters of impurity, bits of precious scandal, and then retail them for the purpose of gloating over youthful depravity. They put on the great green goggles of suspicion, and tinge everything with their own jealousy. They see anything that they can lay in small clothes as an embryo sinner; and every pure minded school girl as a victim, only waiting an opportunity. We do not propose to argue with these Pecksniffian morality men, who turn up their eyes in holy horror at the awful depravity of human nature in general, and of the public schools in particular. We do not doubt that impure minded boys and girls are to be found in schools, as well as impure minded men and women are found in society; but they are exceptions to the general rule.

That the tendency of educating boys and girls together is to excite improper and impure thoughts, we deny. That the standard of morality and propriety is lower than in schools where the sexes are separated, we also deny. But there are others who desire a separation of the sexes, not on the ground of the temptations to immoral acts and practices, but on the plea of the "proprieties." They think it may be all well enough for the boys, but then the association tends to blunt the delicate sensibilities of the girls, and to make them rude and masculine. Fashionable boarding schools for young ladies allow no boys about the premises; and the graduates of these institutions are supposed to be the very pink of propriety. In answer to this objection, we will consider some of the mutual benefits resulting from educating boys and girls together.

The presence of girls in a school room throws a strong restraining and refining influence over boys. They are more attentive to personal appearance and neatness of dress; they are more refined in manner, and careful in speech. They have higher feelings of honor and manliness. They stand in wholesome dread of the public opinion of the girls which flows down meanness and profanity and vulgarity. Boys have quite as high feelings of honor as men. The restraining influence of girls over boys is the same as that of woman over man.

Remove any community of men from the society of women, and what is the result? Does it make them more refined in manner, or purer in thought? In the early days of California, throughout the mines, there were no women; what was the social condition of the thousands of rough men, let loose from the restraints of society? We leave it for those who, like us, have lived in such a one-sided society to answer.

The presence of an innocent girl is the angel which drives from the mind of the boy an impure thought, and seals his lips against any coarse word. The most debased boy dare not be guilty of an indecent action, or vulgar word in the presence of high minded girls, just as the basest man shrinks abashed from the presence of a virtuous woman, or hides his depravity under the mask of honor and politeness.

We believe that girls educated with boys will grow up into womanhood with stroller, purer, nobler, better developed characters, than if trained in seclusion. They will be better capable of acting, and thinking for themselves. We think that no where can they form better ideas of true manhood, than in public schools, where ambitious and manly boys are their associates; where mind is Horrible Account of Turkish Cruelty.

(Insurgent Headquarters, Phosphorus, on Slope of Mount Ida, Correspondence (April 9) of the London News.)
Whatever may be the scope of foreign intervention as regards Cretan politics, it should secure immediate burying of the dead on both sides. There are so many bodies rotting in the sun that they may well breed a pestilence with the increasing heat of summer.—It is not a subject upon which I care to enlarge, but assuredly something should be done, and much can be done when intervention shall have put a stop to the desperate struggle between Christians and Turks. But there will remain hundreds of dead women and children hidden away high up on the mountains, where they sought refuge when their homes were destroyed, and where they died of cold or hunger. These victims to the balance of power leave their bones among the rocks to testify that European chivalry gave the Turks every chance. With other insurrections it has been different. Our Western ships of war cruised off Sicily in 1860, disregarding the feelings of the Neapolitan Government; but the feelings of Turkish stockholders in 1867 have been scrupulously spared. True, a British officer was found to take upon himself the charge of saving as many refugees as his ship would carry. He well deserves the thanks of his countrymen for having redeemed our name from utter disgrace in these waters. But why was not the act of mercy repeated a dozen times by order from home? I wish that the noble lords and right honorable gentlemen who scrupled to offend the Turks by removing their victims could know how assevering rights have been asserted in Crete, and could dream of such knowledge every night for a twelvemonth.

Many stories of Turkish cruelty towards the insurgents have doubtless reached you, and it is probable that some of them were over-colored by the warmth of party zeal. I am sorry to say, however, that only too much is strictly true. Things have been done which the delicacy of modern society forbids me to record. Outrages have been committed like the worst of the bad old times of Turkish conquest; and who can wonder? There is an outer gloss of civilized life on many of the pachas, educated abroad or by foreign masters; but the Turkish soldiery is rough as of yore. Then there are the Cretan Mahometans, burning for revenge, and a horde of wild Albanians, brought hither because they understand mountain warfare, with such elements of mischief left freely to work, you may easily believe that there are stories which it would be hard to over color. I have met witnesses enough to prove a score of murders before an English jury; and when I see the sorrow-stricken faces and flashing eyes of those who speak, it is not difficult to imagine that they retaliate in terrible earnest when they have the power. It is more from a wish that the struggle should be quickly stopped by intervention from abroad than to persuade you that Turks and Albanians are cruel that I mention these horrors; yet as regards the class above referred to, of semi-civilized pachas, of whom much capital is made by Western Turkophiles, I have a word to say. In a village named Apollonion, not far from our present quarters, stands a house built by an English gentleman, who was married to a Cretan. The Englishman had been dead for several years, but the house remained in possession of his family, and being well furnished, offered some temptation to plunderers. Now it happened that the Turkish Apollonion under the command of semi-civilized pachas, and this officer allowed his men to sack the English house, watching with pleasure their work of destruction. So what next took place, and which concerns a couple of young Cretan girls, the prettiest in the village, I will only say that this semi-civilized pacha outraged instead of protecting them.

The Christians cannot take the sea coast fortresses, and the Turks are unable to reduce the hill country, so that intervention seems to be the only means of escape from a continual scene of horror and suffering. How far diplomatics have advanced we do not know, since our communication with Europe is very uncertain, but we hope every day to hear that some decided step has been taken. First an armistice, then a permanent settling of the question. This is the course which would save the Island from utter ruin, and leave diplomats free to act as they thought best upon reflection. I do not doubt but that the Christians can keep up the struggle for a long while, perhaps until Turkey shall be disturbed in other quarters. The Islanders are still full of spirit, and their mountains are as rugged as ever. But is it right to let any more villages be destroyed, and more Turks and Cretons slaughtered, when the end must come from outside pressure? It has been said that were the island freed from her tyrants, the Mahometan islanders (Greek by birth and language) might be massacred in revenge for what Mahometan strangers have done in Crete as well as for their own deeds of violence. This would be the case only with a few particular chiefs and families.—The mass of Cretan Mahometans could safely be left to their Christian neighbors, if only the large towns were held for a while by some third party until passions had cooled down and wrongs were to some extent forgotten. There are in the kingdom of Greece many Mahometan subjects of George I. who live quite contentedly under Christian rule, and speaking Greek in their homes, have a strong attachment to the common country.

DEATHS IN BRITISH COAL MINES.—The Edinburgh Review states that it is estimated that the total number of lives sacrificed in British coal mining, from the earliest notices to the year 1850, was not less than ten thousand. In November 1850 the first act for the inspection of coal mines came into operation, and there have been under it authentic data for accidents. During the ten years from 1850 to 1860, the deaths in or at all the British coal mines amounted to nine thousand and ninety. In the ensuing five years, ensuing 1865, the deaths were altogether four thousand eight hundred and twenty seven. Thus, then, adding to the ten thousand deaths up to 1850, 10,000 more in 1860, and nearly 5,000 more up to the close of 1865, we have in all an estimate of nearly twenty five thousand deaths from coal mine accidents in England from the commencement of any account of them to within little more than a year of the present time.

It may be advisable in large cities to have some schools in which the sexes are separated to accommodate the children of parents whose prejudices against sending their girls to school with boys are too strong to be overcome by reason; but we trust the day is far distant when the American Common Schools of our State will imitate the European system, and educate boys and girls separately. —California Teacher.

An American lady in Paris went out shopping and was surprised at buying and elegant silk dress for $15, and could not account for the low figure until the polite Frenchman naively reminded her that in her country the "people have the luxury of self-government, you know, and prices are very high."

"Truth, crushed to earth, will rise again."

Adventurers of a Romantic Son.

At an early hour yesterday morning a heavy robbery was perpetrated in a large wholesale establishment on South Water St., under very peculiar circumstances, and owing, too, to the culpable carelessness, or rather disposition, of a son of the proprietor.

Pieron J. Nava is the name of the youth. Late on Thursday night he hired a hack for the purpose of taking a ride. He was then in a fearful state of intoxication. Unfortunately he struck the wrong hack, one driven by a fellow called "Dutch Frank." This individual, seeing in his mind's eye a cool five dollars, determined upon his course—not to restrain the impulsive and intoxicated strapping in his midnight carousal, but to drive him anywhere and everywhere. On Wallis street, Mr. Nava saw from within his enclosure two gaily dressed demireps tripping along the sidewalk, and falling to see the advantage of having some sweet spirits share his drive, he called the demireps into the hack. This performance was seen by a policeman, who suspected something wrong, but took no action in the matter. Finally, the headstrong youth conceived the idea of taking his company to his father's store, and to the store the party went. There the festive little company enjoyed themselves to a superlative degree, but alas for the young man, he paid dearly for his whistle.

The lozenges, within the circle of whose smiles to him was "elysium, and all that poets feign of bliss and joy," soon became restive and wanted to depart. He drew from his pocket the key of the safe and exultantly said, "Well, I don't want you to take me for a beat," at the same time opening the safe and flinging back the door on its hinges. He was drunk, very drunk, and was, yesterday morning found him sweetly snoring on the floor. The door of the safe was open, and upon examination, $2,600 in bonds and greenbacks were found missing. A few hours previous to the discovery of the young man, "Dutch Frank," the hackman, reported at the Central Station that the woman, whose names are Lou Morgan and Emma Lee, were plundering the safe. A policeman was sent around, and succeeded in arresting the parties.

Mr. Nava, Jr., has learned a lesson he will long remember. In the safe he had deposited, it is said an amount of upwards of $15,000 in various shapes, all of which belonged to him personally; in fact, the young gentleman has a prospect of becoming in possession of an estate of over $140,000 at some future time.

The above is a strange case, almost incredible, but nevertheless true. The two women are to be arraigned before the Police Court, this morning, when the hackman will testify in the case, and young Pieron blushing say what he has to say.

None of the stolen money was found in the possession of the women, though no doubt exists but that they were guilty of the theft. —Chicago Republican.

A BIBULOUS INUENDO.—L. Gaylord Clark sends to the New York Sunday Mercury the following good story:
Some years ago, when the total abstinence excitement was at its height, and the Maine liquor law was the great social topic of the day, I called with George Kendall, of the New Orleans Picayune, at the office of the Harper Brothers, then in Cliff street. George was running his new book on Mexico through their press at the time, and having been acquainted with the brothers for many years previously, was of course on the most intimate terms with them.

James, the Mayor, was at that time a leading apostle in the temperance cause, and used occasionally to rally George upon what he thought to be the evidence of an undue bibulous propensity. "Your face looks rather reddish this morning, George, I'm afraid you indulge." Which Kendall certainly did; but always in moderation—never anything like excess.

"After sitting a few moments, George said to the younger brother, Fletcher.
"Fletcher, where's Jim? where the Mayor? I want to see him."
"He's in the library room," replied Fletcher, entertaining a company of women from the Martha Washington temperance society. They held a meeting at the Tabernacle tomorrow night and the Mayor is going to preside."

"Good!" said George; "I'll go right in and see him. Come Clark," added Kendall, "let us see how the city's chief magistrate looks in council."
George rapped at the door.
"Come in," answered the Mayor.
Kendall opened the door slowly, as if in hesitation, glanced askance at the eight or ten old women, winked knowingly to the Mayor, and then said, with an inimitable maudlin Jimmy Twitcher air:
"Jim, let us go and get another drink!"
It is not often that any one can fluster James Harper; but "you better believe" he was flustered on this occasion. He looked horror-stricken at the very idea, as he returned the astonished gaze of the old ladies.
"Another drink!" as if they had already had one together, early as it was in the morning.

Last Summer, I saw George, on his return from Paris. We reminiscized upon this incident, and Kendall said:
"I have not heard anything from Jim from that day to this about any indulging."

HEAVY ON MEMPHIS.—A New York paper thus does up Millerism and Memphis: Some foolish storekeepers in Memphis yesterday "settled up their business," in the belief that the world was coming to an end. Some Millerite maniacs told them it would. It didn't, or at least hasn't come to an end around here yet, and looks none the worse for wear as far as we can decry. But the joke is that Memphis people should order ascension robes. Dr. Dwight said a man who reached heaven via New Orleans was entitled to a double dose of salvation. Now, we can believe in miracles, but not in the possibility of Paradise by the way of Memphis, which is to New Orleans what murder is to telling lies. Teen the other joke is that these merchants "settled up their business." That's more than ever they did with their debts, and Messrs. Claffin and Stewart would like to be consulted before Memphis merchants conclude to exchange gingham for glory.

MISCELLANY.

A New Destructive Instrument.—A chemist of Marcellus professes to have invented a new preparation of Greek fire, which, unless the description is outrageously exaggerated, will certainly put an end to all war. With this terrible agent of destruction the inventor claims that he could envelop in flames an army of one hundred thousand men, from a distance of one thousand yards, within less than five minutes. In a naval battle he could run into the enemy, and in fifteen seconds cover its decks with a torrent of flame, which would burn the rigging, penetrate the hatchways, and instantaneously annihilate all the crew. The invention seems to have one little drawback, however, which may prevent its general introduction, viz., as the chemist himself naively admits, neither victors nor vanquished would return from the field of battle on which this terrible fire was used. In fact, as both armies would be destroyed, it would puzzle historians to decide which was the victor and which the vanquished.

AN INHUMAN CATHOLIC SERVICE.—The Baltimore American states that there is now approaching completion, at the intersection of Eager and Allegheny streets, in that city, an immense edifice, which will be occupied by the St. James Roman Catholic congregation. Some idea of the extent of this building may be formed from the fact that it requires one million eight hundred thousand bricks in its erection, and will seat comfortably three thousand persons on the ground floor. The work of erecting is done by the priests known as redshirts, whose principal church is at the corner of London and Wolf streets. The principal sum required to erect this immense specimen of architecture was raised by weekly contributions from members of the congregation of twenty-five cents each. It is one of the most attractive and imposing buildings in the city.

A NEW YORK ROMANCE.—Some years since the daughter of a fashionable family on Fifth avenue, New York, was only fourteen years of age, was wooed and won, in childish fashion, by a gentleman of seventeen, and were clandestinely married in church. The parents were informed of it in time to meet the two made one at the church door. The groom was marched off to school, and the bride locked up in her room. She was subsequently taken to Paris, where she was introduced into society. Of course, her beauty and wealth brought her many suitors; but she repelled them all, and continued in faithful correspondence with her husband. Not long since she returned to New York. The first person she turned to on landing was her faithful lord. He had grown manly and handsome and was eager to embrace his wife. The parents did not object this time.

An hour of vice is as long as an hour of virtue; but the difference between good and bad actions is infinite. Good actions, though they diminish our time here as well as bad actions, yet they lay up for us a happiness in eternity, and will recompense what they take away by a plentiful return at last. When we trade with virtue, we do but buy pleasure at the expense of time. So it is not so much a consuming of time as an exchange. As a man sows his corn, he is content to wait awhile, that he may, at the harvest, receive with advantage.—Owen Feltham.

FORTUNES MADE DURING THE WAR.—The many fortunes made during the war by the increase of nominal values have done much to disseminate false ideas in regard to the true avenues to wealth, and to induce persistence at this epoch in a business policy which was only adopted for a time when the productive powers of the country were being diminished and its consumption increased through the wastefulness of war.

Geniality is neither in birth, manner, nor fashion, but in mind. A high sense of honor, a determination never to take a mean advantage of another; adherence to truth, delicacy, and politeness toward those with whom you may have dealings, are the essential and distinguished characteristics of a gentleman.

KNOWN BY THE SHAPE OF THEIR SHOES.—The commercial editor of the Watchman and Reflector, in a report of the Lynn shoe market, notices a curious fact the difference in shape required by various sections. "The Southern ladies wear boots cut very high in the instep; the ladies of California and the Southwestern States require a broad, wide boot, while for the trade of our New England cities a very narrow delicate shaped boot is demanded."

VERY GOOD.—In her letter to the San Jose Mercury "Topsy Turvey" says:
"I just had to drop my pen to go out and see the procession. For a week or two there have been grand preparations afoot for a grand celebration to-day, in honor of the eighth system. Whether they intended to march eight hours was not stated in the programme. The turnout was splendid; three or four bands of music, flags, banners and badges; and some of the companies were formed of as fine looking men as you will find in a day's travel. I am glad they have got the eight-hour law, if they wanted it; but I wish that women could get the same wage for working eight hours as for fourteen."

Admiral Porter is taking great interest in a base ball match, which nine midshipmen at the Annapolis Naval School are soon to play with a base ball club of New York.

HOW TO FORM A VIGOROUS MIND.—Let every youth settle in his mind that if he ever would be anything, he has got to make himself; or, in other words, to rise by application. Let him always try his own strength, and try it effectually before he is allowed to call on others. Send him back again to the resources of his own mind, for industry and perseverance will accomplish it. In his early and timid flights, let him know that stronger pilons are near and ready to sustain him, but only in case of absolute necessity. When in the rugged paths of science, if difficulties impede his progress which he cannot surmount, let him be helped over them; but never let him think of being led, when he has the power to walk without help; or of carrying his ore to another furnace, when he can melt in his own.

Three centuries and a half ago when Magellan made his bold push into the unexplored Pacific ocean, he was three years in making his voyage around the world. The trip can now be made in ninety-six days.

From Capt. Hathaway we have the following particulars of the murder of a seaman, named George Washington, by Michael Williams, one of his shipmates, on board the Vedette, at Uzalady, on Thursday last, 27th ult.

Two men got in a quarrel over their meal, when the man Washington called Williams, a d-d black bastard; blows ensued, and the parties finally clinched and went down, Washington under. Washington turned Williams, and got him in between some lumber, so that he could not well help himself, and was forced to cry enough.

Mr. Flanders' majority has been increased to 153 votes, Stevens county having been left out on the official count, as no returns had been received from there, at the Secretary's office, up to the day when the official vote had to be canvassed according to law.

ALL SORTS OF PARAGRAPHS.

The French papers speak with great mystery of a new cannon, which is believed to be the invention of the Emperor, and is as much more terrible than any other weapon, as that ruler is more powerful than other monarchs.

A Paris paper, called the Laine, lately applied to Lamartine for permission to publish a caricature of him. The poet wrote the following answer: "I never great my gratitude for the biographical articles of which you speak. I cannot authorize in my person a travesty of the human face divine, which, although it might not offend the man, would be an offense against nature, and turn humanity into derision."

An old deacon in New York State had a curly-headed clerk who spent most of his time, and all his attention in the cultivation of a saffron moustache, (similar to the one Dickens ascribes to Fascination Fledgeby.)

The Chicago Tribune says that it was estimated that from three to four millions worth of buildings would have been erected this year in Chicago, not one of which will now be commenced.
