A Monster. On the 25th of February, at 9 o'clock in the evening, the officers in charge of the police station in the Rue de Tanger, Paris, were startled by the appearance of a young man who made this statement at the desk: "My name is Felix Lemaitre. I was born in Paris on May 2, 1866. I am an apprentice. I surrender myself to justice for the murder of a little boy, whom I have killed at the Hotel de Doubs." Improbable as this seemed, M. de Teule, the commissary, gave orders for the detention of Lemaitre, and went in person to see if there was any truth in what he said. In room No. 42 of the Hotel de Doubs he found that an abominable murder had been committed. On a bed lay the naked body of a child, gagged and bound. The throat was cut, the body ripped open. The covert of yellow wool was dotted with blood. On the bolster were marks of the assassin's fingers, which had been carefully wiped. On the ground was a knife. The commissary searched the child's clothes and found in them a school-boy cap marked "Le corner with a name 'Jean Schoener, No. 17 Rue Casselle.' M. de Teule ordered the boy's body to be taken to the morgue. His parents learned of the murder through the shouts of an excited mob. They were poor rag pickers and Jean was their only child. At the police station Lemaitre, who in appearance is sallow, thin and somewhat tall for his age, made a full confession of his crime. "On the 15th of this month," he said, "I stole 2000 francs from my employer, M. Siraut, of the Rue d'Aboukir. I spent the money at the theatre and in pleasure excursions. Yesterday, finding myself penniless, I saw everything in a different light. I took a child came to me. Chained brought in my way the poor little boy whom I killed. Finding him in the street, I showed him a steel chain and promised that he should have it if he would follow me. When he was in my room I tied his hands behind his back, though in sport. Then I undressed him and twice plunged my knife into his body. To stop his cries I cut his tongue and then his throat. I cannot explain what led me to commit the deed. I had read many novels, and those novels had made me believe that a murderer would go on as I put into execution. The statement was made with perfect coolness. When the crowd commenced to clamor outside the prison, Lemaitre seemed to be clated. "After all," said he, "the guillotine has been abolished, and even if it were not, I am too young for the scaffold."

William Penn. July 20th being the 163d anniversary of the death of William Penn, and much comment having been made in regard to certain citizens proposing to remove his bones from England to that state, a slight outline of how he became possessed of so large a tract of country will be in order. His father, who was an admiral in the English navy, had bequeathed him a claim on the government of £16,000 for arrears of pay and cash advanced to the navy. Penn knew very well that such a sum was irrecoverable from Charles II. He had long dreamed of founding a colony where peace and righteousness might dwell together, and he decided to compound his debt for a tract of country in North America. The block of land he selected lay to the north of the Catholic province of Maryland, owned by Lord Baltimore. Its length was nearly 300 miles, its width about 100, and its area little less than the whole of England. Objections were raised, but Charles was too glad to get rid of a debt on such easy terms. At the council where the charter was granted, Penn stood in the royal presence with a look of anxiety, a strong evidence of his anxiety is the fact that Penn observed, "Friend Charles, why dost thou not keep on thy hat?" To which his majesty replied, laughing, "It is the custom of this place for only one person to remain covered at a time."

The fine country thus secured became the resort of large numbers of Quakers, who, to their desire for the free profession of their faith, united a spirit of enterprise, and very quickly Pennsylvania rose to high importance among the American plantations. Penn treated the Indians with justice and kindness and a strong evidence of his sagacity is the fact that not a drop of Quaker blood was ever shed by an Indian.

IT IS NOT FOR HOWGATE. An Exploring Expedition Which Ends Fair to Make It Terrible for the Arctic Explorer.

WASHINGTON, July 17.—The Post publishes the following, which is said to refer to Capt. Howgate, late of the signal service: A scandal which promises to take the place of the Christianity case as a topic among those loving such things, has just been developed in this city. The principal party involved is a man whose name would be instantly recognized as occupying a prominent official position and taking the lead in a certain scientific enterprise. His lady is a pretty ex-treasurer clerk, who owes her loss of position to her indiscreet public reception of attentions from the party of the first part. The latter is called Mr. G. for convenience of designation. An item appeared in the Post a short time ago to the effect that he had left the city with his wife, and referring to a circumstance that took place at his house, designating his location not far from Epiphany church. His wife, who was then in the city, and living in the northwest section of the city, read the item to some surprise, her suspicions at the same time being somewhat aroused. When he subsequently returned he made

A PLAUSIBLE EXPLANATION. "The mistake of the reporter," Mrs. G. accepted this as she had in similar circumstances before with what grace she might. Her eyes have been closed to much that transpired for the sake of her daughter, a beautiful girl just reaching womanhood. Of late, Mr. G., while providing sufficiently for the household necessities, has been called to appear for money to dress his wife and daughter in a style becoming their position. This, coupled with a knowledge of his sources of income, particularly real estate, made his wife still more suspicious that some serious wrong was going on than the rumors that had been in her ears involved. The house referred to in the news item mentioned she knew to belong to her husband, and he had referred to her when he was out of the city a few days since to call at the house. A colored woman responded to her ring, "Is this Mr. G.'s house?" she asked. No sooner was the affirmative answer given than an inkling of the true state of the case flashed upon her mind. She pushed past the woman, saying as she did so, "I am his wife." She stepped into the house, unlocked the door, and there she found her husband, and she was not a moment in coming to the conclusion that the man who had been referred to in the news item mentioned she knew to belong to her husband, and he had referred to her when he was out of the city a few days since to call at the house. BRIDGE BUILDING

William Horton has just completed four bridges for Walla Walla county to the satisfaction of all who are interested. Two are on the Cappel and two on the Walla Walla river, at Whinn's Crossing. Messrs Horton & Picard insert an advertisement in to-day's STATESMAN which our friends in need of bridges will do well to notice.

THE BUFFALO PITT'S THRESHER

The best in the world, made expressly for service in Oregon and Washington. My valuable improvements have been adopted, among others an improved arrangement for separating the grain from the straw, Belt Tighteners on all machines, Breaks on the Wagon and the self arching to allow a short turn. The Feed Table has been improved and enlarged, and is most respect the Buffalo Pitt's "Challenge" Thresher is the acknowledged King of the field.
