The End of the Play.

The play is done, the curtain drops. Slowly to the prompter's belt: A moment yet the actor staid: And looks around to say farewell! It is an irksome work and task; And when he laughs and said his say, He shows, as he removes the mask, A face that's anything but gay.

Who knows the inscrutable design! Blessed be he who took and gave it! Why should your mother, Charles, not mine, Be weeping at her darling's grave? We live on Heaven, that wills it so, That darkly rules the fate of all, That sends the respite or the blow, That's free to give or recall.

So each shall mourn in life's advance. Good-bye, dear friends, and kindly killed; Shall grief for many a fortnight cease, And longing passion unfulfilled. Alas! whatever fate be sent, Pray God the heart may kindly grieve, Although the heart with grief be bent, And whitened with the winter snow.

Come wealth or want, come good or ill, Let us not quarrel with our fate; And bow before the awful Will, And bear it with an honest heart. Her sweet angelic smile, Go, lose or conquer as you can: But if you fall, or if you rise, Be chary, pray God, a gentleman. Theobald.

The Song My Mother Sang.
The song my mother sang when I Was but an infant child, Brings me again before my view The scenes of my early life, And in my hours of weakness, Oh, welcome to the strain That breaks upon my restless sleep, And charms my weary brain: And vision bright of boyish hours, A wild tumultuous song, Hark, as though on angel wings, With that remembered song.

The tide of years, upon whose flood My soul hath held her track, Obeys the spell of those notes, And rolls the water back: And care and anguish flee away, While joy and hope re-bleom, And flowers out their scented buds Upon sweet memory's tomb; And midst the tempest of my grief Laden with joy's own possession, Within my mother's home.

What Came of an Omnibus Ride.

Some time ago I was riding in an omnibus with some half dozen well dressed ladies and white kided gentlemen. At a signal from somebody on the sidewalk, the driver reined up his horses, and a very old man, with tremulous limbs and silvery locks presented himself at the door for admission.—The driver shouted through the skylight, "Room for one more, there, inside"; but the gentlemen looked at the old man and frowned and the ladies spread out their ruffled skirts, for his hat was shabby, and his coat threadbare. He saw how it was, and why there was "no room," and meekly turned about to go down the steps, when a fine looking young man, who sat next to me, sprang to the door, and seizing him by the arm, said: "Take my place, sir; you are quite welcome to it. I am young and hearty; it won't weary me to walk," and kindly leading the old man to the vacant seat, he leaped from the steps and walked briskly down the street, while I looked admiringly after him, saying to myself, that young man has a good mother.

We drove on, and the more I looked at the old man's silver hairs, and fine, honest face, the more indignant I felt at the way he had been treated. Whether he read my thoughts in my countenance or not I cannot say; but after most of the passengers had got out, he moved up to me and said, "Good boy, good boy, wasn't he? My dear, (and here his voice sunk to a confidential whisper) I have got money enough to buy out all the upstart people that filled this omnibus, twenty times over, but I like this old hat and coat. They are as good as a crucible; they help me to find out the true metal. Good morning, my dear. Thank you for your pity just as much as though I needed it; and the old man pulled the strap, got out of the omnibus, and hobbled off down the street.

Some time after I advertised for lodgings, and was answered by a widow lady. I liked the air of the house, it was so neat and quiet; and the flowering pots in the window were a letter of recommendation to me. Your cold-hearted, icicle people never care for flowers. But what particularly pleased me at Mrs. Harris' was the devotion of her son to his mother. I expected no less, for the moment he opened the door, I saw he was the same young man who gave up his seat in the omnibus to the old gentleman.

John did all the marketing and providing, as wisely and as well as if he were seventy. Instead of seventeen. He wheeled his mother's arm chair to the pleasantest corner; handed her the footstool and newspaper, and spectacles; offered her his arm up stairs and down, and spent his evenings by her side, instead of joining other young men in racing over the city to find ways to kill time.

It was a beautiful sight in those days, when beardless boys came whistling and stamping into their mother's presence, with their hats on, and calling her the "old woman."

I spent a pleasant autumn under Mrs. Harris' quiet roof. And now winter had set in, with its nice long evenings. John came in to tea, one night, with his bright face overclouded. His mother was at his side in an instant. John's master had failed, and John was thrown out of employment.

Then I learned that it was only by the strictest economy, and hoarding of every cent of John's small salary, that the rent was paid and the table provided.

And now, so the widow said, the horse must be given up, for John might be a long while getting another place; clerkships were so difficult to obtain; and they must not think of running in debt.

It was such a pity. We were all so comfortable and happy there, in that cozy little parlor, with its sunny bow window full of flowers, and its bright Lehigh fire, and easy cushioned chairs; that cozy parlor, where the little round table, with its snowy cloth, had been so often spread; and the fragrant coffee, and delicate tea biscuit, and racy newspapers had been so often discussed; where John in his slippers and dressing gown, with his dark hair pushed off his broad forehead, read to us page after page of some favorite author, while the wind was welcome to whistle itself dumb outside the threshold, and old winter to pile up the snow at the door till he got tired of it. It was hard!

John walked up and down the floor, with his hands crossed behind, and Mrs. Harris went round the room, hunting after her spectacles, when they were comfortably reposing on the bridge of her fine Roman nose.

A knock at the door! A note for John! "Enclosed, find $500, to pay Mr. John Harris' house rent the coming year."

John rubbed his eyes, and looked at his mother; his mother looked at me, and I looked at both of them; and then we cried and laughed till we scarcely had the hysterics.

"But who was the friend?" That was the question. We were all born Yankees, and did our best at "guessing"; but it didn't help us. Well, at any rate, it was very nice, all round.

Mrs. Harris and I had not got our feminine tongues still till the next day, when John came back, in the middle of the forenoon, with another riddle, to drive our womanly curiosity still more distracted. He was requested to call immediately—so a note he had just received, read—at Mr. Harris & Co.'s, and accept the head clerkship, at a salary of $1,400 a year; being highly recommended by a person, whose name his new employers declined giving. That was a greater puzzle still. John and his mother had rich relations, to be sure, but though they had always been interferred in all their plans for making a living, they never had been known to give them anything except—advice, or to call on them by daylight; and it wasn't at all likely that the "leopard would change his spots," at that late day.—No, it couldn't be John's rich relatives, who were always in such a panic lest the upper tendon should discover that their cousins, the Harris's lived in an unfashionable part of the town, dined at one o'clock, and noticed tradespeople and mechanics.

"We are too sensible to believe in fairies, and who the mischief was emptying the 'horn of plenty' in that way at our feet, was the question.

When we awoke the next morning, we found in the back yard a barrel of apples, a barrel of flour, a keg of butter, and a bag of buckwheat flour, labelled, "for Mr. John Harris,"—street.

John declared (after pinching himself to see if he were really John), that he fastened the gate inside the very last thing before he put on his night cap. Mrs. Harris said something must have climbed over and unfasted it; and I jumped right up and down, for a bright thought had just struck me, and I was determined to hold on to it, for I didn't have a bright thought every day.

"What now?" said John, as I capered round the room.

"Oh, nothing," said I, "only it takes a woman, after all, to find out a secret—and to keep it, too," I added, snapping my fingers at him.

That day I thought it would do me good to ride about in an omnibus. I tried several. It didn't make much difference to me whether they went up street or down, or where they finally stopped. I was looking more at the passengers.

By-and-by I saw the person I wanted. Said I, in a whisper, sitting down beside him, "House rent—clerkship—flour—butter—crackers and buckwheat, all for giving you a seat in an omnibus."

Didn't I know that 'the fairy' was the nice old man with silver locks? Didn't he bribe me to hold my tongue, by telling me that he might get a peep at John and his mother? Didn't he come? and didn't I look as much astonished when he called, as if it hadn't been settled two days previous? But how was I to know that Mrs. Harris would turn out to be an old love of his? How was John to know, when he felt such an irresistible impulse to be kind to the old man, that his hair had grown white loving his mother? How was the old man to know why he loved John so well, and thought him one of the finest young men he had ever seen? How was I to know that I was to turn out to be what I always so mortally hated—a feminine matchmaker?

READY.—Miners throughout the Basin have everything set, and many are already at work tearing down the hills with the greatly improved facilities in the way of ditches, hydraulics, &c., which the last two or three months without water have enabled them to make; and so far as we can learn, with better success than was anticipated.—Throughout the entire length of all the various paying creeks and gulches between this city and Placerville, we observe an almost continuous network of sluices, ditches and hydraulics. From the present state of forwardness, compared with that of last Spring, it is but reasonable to anticipate during the next two months, a yield of gold twice as large as any realized heretofore during the same length of time. In view of the strong flattering prospects, merchants and business men of every class, are also putting everything in readiness for the "good time coming."—at Placerville and Centerville will this specially apply.—Boise News.

PICTURES must not be too picturesque. Nothing astonishes men like common sense and plain dealing. All great actions have been simple, and all great pictures are.

My Cot Beside the Sea.

A cot that stood beside the sea Was once my childhood home; But I had seen tall ships go by, And longed to see the foam; I had my wish, and far and wide I traversed o'er the world, And saw with pride, in distant lands, My native flag unfurled; Yet absent gave my early home, A constant charm to me, And more than balms I pressed, My cot beside the sea.

The kind hearts beat in many lands The gentle look were true, My longing hopes of home gave birth To many a fervent prayer, And when I laid me down to rest, The sweet desire of day, Gave place to bright and happy dreams Of dear ones far away.

I wept and fondly thought their dreams, Perchance had been of me: Thus day and night I longed to greet, My cot beside the sea.

I halted at length the happy land, I pressed my native shore, I felt my heart grow young again, What could I ask for more? I was content, my visions fled, The friends I loved were near, A stranger in my childhood's home, I stood unmoved, unknown; Yet while one link in memory's chain Unbroken there shall be, My cot beside the sea.

"No Cards."
Such is the comprehensive announcement that meets the eye at the end of those newspaper items which ladies find so interesting under the head of "Married." The phrase "No Cards" may be interpreted as follows—Owing to the hard times and the high price of stationery, the happy couple herein named have concluded to dispense with the custom of sending cards to their innumerable friends.

They trust that the virtue of economy will be duly appreciated, when coal is $3 a ton, and the other expenses of housekeeping are in proportion, and all going up. The happy couple hope that this explanation will prove satisfactory; but should it cost the loss of anybody's friendship, they will try to survive the affliction." Something to this effect we say, was the original idea of this inventive and intrepid young couple who dared to break out a venerable conventionalism and put "No cards" at the end of their advertised felicity. It is intimated by others—not for all these grave reasons, perhaps, but because it has become recognized and approved (if not universally adopted) fashion. Not often is it that economy dictates the fashions. That has done so in this case is a proof of that beautiful magnanimity with which the unmarried portion of the fair sex adapt themselves to these trying circumstances in our national history, and take from the dilatory lover his last weak excuse of "too poor now; guess I'll wait till the war is over." When the war is over, the ladies may conclude to recede from this liberal proposition, and insist on their time honored privilege of scattering showers of pastebored over the contents of their envelopes.

Now is the time to make up matrimonial arrangements cheap; for the same self sacrificing spirit that consents to "no cards" may possibly agree to other economical arrangements of the grand budget of wedding expenses. But that is a point upon which we are not authorized to make a statement and we must refer anxious inquirers to the only sources where they can be correctly informed, viz, in whose opinion of the case they are most directly interested.

This partially discarded custom of sending cards was a very pretty custom. It was pleasant to receive occasionally those double envelopes, and that excess of pastebored, tied with the emblematical silken cord, which marked an eventful epoch in the lives and experience of one's friends, and showed that one was not forgotten in the rush of agreeable anticipations. Just at this time, too, photography was being to find a capital use for some of that superfluous pastebored by copying the heads of the expectant pair upon it and conveying to the distant friends of either party what the other party looked like. With the end of the war and the return of some measure of our national prosperity, and a fall in the price of stationery, the announcement of "No Cards" may pass out of fashion, and photography give a new charm to the hymeneal pastebored of the future.—N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

CATS AND WOMEN.—It is not surprising that the cat should be thought the analogue of woman. Her very soubriquet of Grimaldine—the grey women—intimates that she suggested to our ancestors the idea of a fair spirit emergent from the gloom, like the White Lady of Avenel. Her vagueness of color, and the luminousness of her eyes in the dark, led the ignorant to conceive that there was something supernatural about the cat, and gave birth to superstitions not yet quite eradicated from the popular mind; and a very disagreeable impression is undoubtedly made by her weird and uncanny circumstances.

Adopting the more kindly view, Gray, in a charming poem, familiar to all terms, fuses a "nymph"; and indeed what better representation of the grace, sensibility, wit, refinement and malice of the sex can be found among brutes. The frisky volatility of the kitten, yet innocent of the blood of mice, of a girl yet ignorant of the power of her charms; and the noiseless movement and sedate demeanor of the matron Tabby, recall the experienced matron. From involuntary associations of ideas, the volatile girl is spoken of as "mischiefous kitten," the Frenchman fondly addresses his spouse as "ma chatte," and some persons, by a strange mental obliquity, vituperate any obnoxious old woman as "that old cat."

SHASTA STAGE.—Mr. Rice of Shasta, Cal., arrived in this city on Wednesday afternoon, with passengers, direct from Shasta, which place they left on the 10th of February. This we believe is the first stage that has crossed the Payette and Placerville mountain this season.—Boise News.

The King's Mistake.

Some of our exchanges have revived the following old but good story:

A number of old politicians, all of whom were seeking office under government, were seated at a tavern porch talking, when an old toper named John D—, a person who is very loquacious when cornered, but exactly the opposite when sober, said if the company had no objection he would tell them a story. They told him to "fire away," whereupon he spoke as follows:

"A certain King—I don't remember his name—had a philosopher upon whose good judgment he always depended. Now it happened that one day the King took it into his head to go a hunting, and after the summing the nobles up, making the necessary preparations, he summoned the philosopher and asked him if it would rain. The philosopher assured him that it would not, and he and his nobles departed. While journeying along, they met a countryman on a jackass. He advised them to return, 'for,' he said, 'it will certainly rain.' They smiled contemptuously upon him, and passed on. Before they had gone many miles, however, they had reason to regret not having taken the rustic's advice as, a heavy shower coming up, they were drenched to the skin. When they returned to the palace the King reproached the philosopher severely:

"I met a countryman," said he, "and he knows a great deal more than you; for he told that it would rain, whereas you told me that it would not." The King then gave him his walking papers, and sent for the countryman, who made his appearance.

"Tell me," said the King "how you knew it would rain?"

"I didn't know," said the rustic, "my jackass told me."

"And how, pray, did he tell you?" asked the King.

"By pricking up his ears, your Majesty," replied the rustic.

The King then sent the countryman away, and procuring the jackass of him, put it in the place the philosopher had filled. And here, observed John, looking very wise, is where the King made a great mistake.

"How so," inquired his auditors eagerly.

"Why, ever since that time," every jackass wants an office."

AN OLD MINING TOWN.—Three years ago, says the Nevada Gazette, North San Juan was one of the most lively and flourishing mining camps of the State. Now it is perhaps as dull and monotonous a town as can be found in a week's journey through the mines. The causes of its retrogression are: First that the silver mines of Nevada Territory have drawn a large portion of our former population in that direction; and secondly, because the rich mines in that vicinity have lately fallen into the hands of comparatively few individuals. Property which a few years ago commanded a reasonable price can now be purchased for a mere song—or rather, to speak the truth, cannot be sold at any price. Whether a better state of things is to exist hereafter remains to be seen.—From the best light before us we judge that the coming season will place San Juan in a worse condition than it Don't Flirt.

Oh, never, never flirt, girls,
Don't play with human hearts.
You say you mean in fun, girls,
To wound with cupid's darts;
But they are cruel wounds, girls,
Wounds that for life may hurt,
Then heed a wise old counselor—
Don't flirt, my girls, don't flirt.
You say that men are hardy, girls,
And really never feel,
But many an old bachelor
His secret could reveal,
And tell of happy days gone by,
False girls, and feelings hurt—
And now condemn all womankind—
Don't flirt, then, girls, don't flirt.
There is no real pleasure girls,
In striving to excel,
In such an art as flirting, girls,
Though you may do it well.
Then, if you love, love truly, girls,
But love not to your hurt;
Choose wisely, well and sanably,
But girls, oh, never flirt.

MASONRY.—Masonry is older than letters. Brand's Encyclopedia of Science, Literature and Art, says, "that from Egypt were derived the principal mysteries, and that it was in the darkness of subterranean apartments that these initiations had birth, in which secrecy was the first law. According to Plutarch, the Sphinxes with which the entrances of their temples were decorated, signified that Egyptian mythology was mysterious and emblematic. In those temples the line and the square was never abandoned they had no circular monument, and their temples were covered with symbolic characters. Thus has Masonry seen the introduction of letters, the discoveries of the arts and sciences, and the spread of the Christian religion; it has witnessed the rise and the fall of all the old nations of the earth, survived the darkness and turmoil of the middle ages, and now stands a wonder of the world."

The best thing about a girl is cheerfulness. We don't care how ruddy her cheek may be, or how velvety her lips—if she wears a scowl, even her friends will consider her ill-looking; while the young lady who illuminates her countenance with smiles, will be regarded as handsome, though her complexion be coarse enough to grind nutmegs on. As perfume is to the rose, so is good nature to the lovely.

PARTICULAR.—A gentleman, seventy-five years of age, residing in Rhode Island, recently lost his wife by death. A venerable lady, a neighbor, nearly five score years, was asked if she had called on her old friend since he had lost his wife. "Why," she answered, in almost indignant surprise, "No, indeed! it would not look well for a widow like me to call on him now, as he is a widower."

A HAPPY LAND.—There is a place in New Hampshire, they say, where they never have any old maid. When a girl reaches the age of twenty, and is still unmarried, the young men club together and draw lots for her. Those who lose the chance pay a bonus to the one that gets her.

"COWARDICE" says Montague, "is the mother of cruelty. Courage stops when it sees the enemy at its mercy. But cowardice, to show that it can also do its part, not having been able to figure in the first rank, takes its part in the second, which is blood and slaughter."

In the game of life men most frequently play the knave and women the deuce.

A good man is kinder to his enemy than bad men are to their friends.

Solemn gravity is often a deceitful trick to gain credit of the world for more sense than a man has.

No one can look on a fashionable woman's figure now-a-days and say that figures went low.

Those who cry loudest "look out for deceit" might for the most part be properly told in reply, "look in for deceit."

The use we make of our fortune determines its sufficiency. A little is enough if used wisely—too much if used foolishly.

More shells were discharged in the single battle of Gettysburg than were employed in all the battles that Napoleon ever fought.

To enjoy the society of a friend, we should limit our intercourse with him. We have pushed our companionship too far when we feel ourselves sharing each other's dullness.

If you are in a bookstore, and the book-seller knocks you down with the first volume of a book, knock him down with the second.

The great poet tells us that music soothes the savage heart. So, if you are captured by the Indians, sing and whistle with all your might.

Many a spiritual shepherd takes up the crook, not that the sheep may be fed, but that he may never want a warm woolen suit and a joint of mutton.

The demagogue blows up the flames of political discord for no other occasion than that he may thereby handily boil his own pot.

If you can't make a village or a parish or a family think alike, don't suppose you can make a world pinch or pad its belief to a single pattern.

A certain Mr. David Fender, popping the question in a letter, concluded thus: "And should you say yes, dear Mary, I will truly be your D. Fender."

What is said from the feeling of the moment should excite but a feeling of the moment.

You may safely differ with the liberal, but be sure you agree with the bigot.

Many people have a great deal of their own religion and none of God's.

If men will but amuse the world, it will freely forgive them for cheating it.

Never marry a woman till you know where her dress ends and her soul begins.

A woman may be surprised, astonished, taken all aback, but never dumfounded.

When men are long indifferent toward us, we grow indifferent to their indifference.

Women can keep a secret, but it invariably takes a whole neighborhood of them to do it.

Those who go to festivals got up for the relief of the poor eat to fill other people's stomachs.

San Francisco.
Importers and Wholesale Dealers.

ENTIRE NEW AND FRESH STOCK.
We would call the attention of country Merchants to our usually large stock of Goods. Our stock comprises every article in the Clothing and Furnishing line. We have constantly on hand the latest and greatest Variety of Cassimere and Wool HATS of any house in San Francisco, and our prices for these goods are less than those of any house, as we receive them direct from the manufacturer's consignment. Our stock of SPRING AND SUMMER GOODS is particularly attractive, and the great feature to the country merchant is the usually low price—less than the Prices of Importation.
We also keep the STAPLE ARTICLES in the Dry Goods line, which Goods we have purchased in this market under the hammer, and are offering them at New York Cost, and less.

We publish this card in order that we may make new acquaintances and induce those who have not heretofore purchased of us, to call and examine our stock. Good Articles at Low Prices
Are the great inducements to all who purchase to sell again. Merchants who buy of us can make a good profit and sell to their customers at a low figure.
We remain respectfully, your obt. servts.,
