

Old Song.
Could a man be secure
That his life would endure,
As of old, for a thousand long years,
What art might he know!
What acts might he do!
And all without hurry or care,
But we that have but a span of living,
The thicker must lay on the pleasure,
And since time will not, cannot stay, We'll add the night unto the day,
And thus we'll fill the measure.

Passion.
A night of frenzied passion may consume
All that this host of beauty's gentle bloom,
And one distemp'ered hour of sorrow Print on thy brow the wrinkles of a year.
SHERIDAN.

Lone Mountain.
Far from the noisy, bustling city of San Francisco lies the city of the dead. Secluded among the rolling hills, embowered in shrubbery and perfume by the wild lilac is Lone Mountain Cemetery, the "Land of the Great Departed." Lone Mountain! Is there not something in a name? and what name could be more appropriate—what a musical pathos, with a rhythm of sadness blended therewith.

W. approached the silent city for the first time not with feelings of curiosity, but rather with feelings akin to that experienced by those who pay their pilgrimage to the tomb of the Prophet, for within its enclosures sleeps California's honored dead. On the highest point, as if to watch over and guard the interests of California's dead as he was wont to guard the interests of her living citizens, lies the murdered Broderick. Above his head an admiring people have reared a massive yet beautiful monument, not to perpetuate his memory, for that will be handed down from father to son for generations—but as a token of their appreciation for the life he lived, and the honor that his confidence. With the blood of Broderick was California sealed to the Union.

Close by the last resting place of Broderick, with his martial cloak wrapped around him, sleeps another no less honored of Pacific's noble dead. The Orator, Senator and Soldier, General Baker, whose eloquence was mighty to move the hearts of the people, and whose sword was a terror to the foes of our common country. He fell in the van, while leading his brave men to the charge, another sacrifice upon the altar of Freedom. Broderick fell, the first martyr pierced by the bullet of a traitor, ere the first of secession had burst forth. Baker fell pierced by rebel bullets while attempting to turn back the tide of treason in arms. It is well they sleep side by side, that between the two honored shrines, California's loyal sons may kneel and swear anew to defend and protect, with life and property, the bulwark of honor, the Union for which they died, while Old Ocean in the distance shall respond a deep-toned "Amen!"

In visiting Lone Mountain one loses in a great degree that dread of death which all feel more or less. To know that when our change shall come, and we be called upon to add one more to the population of the silent city, that our long home to be made so lovely, while over blooming flowers will shed their rich fragrance around our head, and crown our bed with beauty; watched by the loving care of friends, and admired by the stranger that visits our graves. We are not for the inverted torch and inscriptions that tell of death, one might suppose that he was wandering amid the beauties of some fairy grove, where The tender violet lies in smiles To avenge that spotted night, Tossing the drops of fragrant dew To scent the evening sky.

They kissed the rose in love and mirth And its petals fairly grew; A shower of pearls they brought, And o'er the lily threw. Plant flowers o'er the graves of the loved and lost ones, and make their resting place an emblem of the beauties of the Paradise of souls.—Red Reef Independent.

A DISTINGUISHED "COPPERHEAD."—If the loyal Democrats of to-day are "Copperheads," George Washington, according to the Republican definition of that word, was one. Witness the following "Copperhead" remarks in the great Chief's Farewell Address to the people of America: "Indignantly frown upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which link together the various parts. The Constitution which at any time exists, till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. Resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretexes. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the power of all departments in one, and thus create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. For though there be no change by usurpation; for let this in one instance make the instrument of good, it is the customary instrument by which free government is destroyed."

CRITICISM'S ADDRESS.—Benj. Shurtliff, of California, referring to a late address of John J. Crittenden to the people of his district, in Kentucky, says: "Every man in California, every man in America, should read this address. It is just such a speech on the mighty issues involving the life of the nation as Stephen A. Douglas would make were he living to day. It is such a speech as Henry Clay and Daniel Webster would make could they once more speak to their countrymen. All he says—every sentence, every word he utters—is fragrant with the odor of nationality. Many will not like his speech. Those who hate the Government of the United States, and love rebellion, will not like the views of the venerable statesman. There is too much coercion, too much war, too strong a determination to wipe the rebellion into submission to the National authority to suit the views of such men. Then, again, those who never thought the old Union was worth having, and thought Washington, Franklin, Hamilton and Madison gave us a Constitution that was "a league with hell"—all such men will bitterly assail Crittenden, for the old Union was good enough for him, and he is opposed to a separation, slavery or no slavery. Like Douglas, he believes this is a white man's country, and a white man's Government, and as such he is for "One country, one Constitution and one destiny."

The "Birth Place" of Daniel Webster, in Franklin, N. H., has passed out of the Webster name. It was owned by the widow of the late Col. Fletcher Webster by whom it has recently been sold to L. D. Colby of Franklin. An advertising chandler modestly says that, "without intending any disparagement to the sum, he may confidently assert that his octagonal spermaceti wax the best lights ever invented."

AYER'S PILLS.
FOR ALL THE PURPOSES OF A FAMILY PHYSIC.

There has long existed a public demand for an effective purgative pill which could be relied on as sure and perfectly safe in its operation. This has been prepared to meet the demand, and an extensive trial of its virtues has conclusively shown that it is a better and more reliable medicine than any other. It is easy to make a purgative pill, but not easy to make the best of all pills—one which should have no injurious effects on the system, and which should be equally effective in all cases. This has been achieved. This has been achieved here, and with what success would respectfully submit to the public judgment. It has been many months for the patient benefit that almost every purgative medicine is administered in the form of pills.
This is not. Many of them produce so much gripping pain and revulsion in the system as to be considered the good to be derived from them. These pills produce no irritation or pain, unless in rare cases, and the evacuating operation or derangement in the bowels. Being purely vegetable, no harm can arise from their use in any case. It is easy to make a purgative pill, but not easy to make the best of all pills—one which should have no injurious effects on the system, and which should

no injurious effects on the system, and which should be equally effective in all cases. This has been achieved. This has been achieved here, and
with what success would respectfully submit to the public judgment. It has been many months
for the patient benefit that almost every purgative
medicine is administered in the form of pills.
be considered the good to be derived from
them. These pills produce no irritation or pain, unless in rare cases, and the evacuating opera-
vegetable, no harm can arise from their use in any case. It is easy to make a purgative pill, but not easy to make the best of all pills—one which should have no injurious effects on the system, and which should
