CHAPTER I.

I did not believe anybody lived there. A ruined castle had never looked more deserted than did that square old house when I came in sight of it. Its bare brown sides stood out against the fall sunshine without a vine clambering near. At a little distance from its southern end there rose a tree, a dying sycamore that drew itself together and refused to droop over a blackened and mossy well curb that stood at its roots. That was all one saw in looking from the hill on whose brow I stopped my horse to rest him and myself and to survey the country.

Hills rose all round the house, and the narrow, grassy road on which I was traveling was the only sign any one had approached the building since it was erected.

So I thought, till, descending the slope and trotting slowly down the road by the house, I started a hen with a brood of little peeping chickens from a huckleberry bush close by the way. Impelled by a strange impulse which I did not understand nor try to resist, I reined in my horse and dismounted. The little chickens ran screaming to their mother as I walked by them to the door. "Poor things!" said I to myself, "how will they ever get through the winter?" I felt like saying that to everything I saw about the place. It was quite a long walk from the highway to the door, and my feet more than once got entangled among the faded remains of the tall weeds that had flourished there all summer. Close by the door I was astonished to see a plot of heliotrope set out in the sun for an hour at midday. I supposed the air was unusually warm for the late fall, and the sunlight felt revivingly on the sweet purple flowers.

I gave a resounding rap on the door with my riding whip that made the house echo like a great hollow shell. Then, before anybody should come, I tried to think what I should say when some one did appear. A middle aged, ordinary looking woman came from somewhere far back, I should think, for I heard her walking a long time before she opened the door.

"Can you accommodate myself and horse till to-morrow?" I asked. "I am tired, and would rather stop here than ride on to the hotel at the next village."

After a moment's thought and scrutiny of my face and dress she replied:

"Yes, I guess so; if you'll take care of your horse yourself."

I agreed to the condition, and she called a child to show me the stable. A little, toddling 4-year-old girl came and went before me, down behind a knoll, where I found a dilapidated barn, into which I introduced my horse.

The presence of the child surprised me. I had not thought there had been a child here for some years. I tried to make her talk, but she would not, or could not, so I walked back to the house. It was somewhat past their dinner hour, and I said I wanted nothing to eat till supper. I saw no one but the woman and child, and began to think I had courted a fit of ennui in yielding to my impulse and coming to this quiet place.

I thought of the heliotrope at the door, and wondered if it belonged to this woman. I studied her face, and decided that if she wished to cultivate flowers she would choose a bright, double marigold.

I sauntered out of doors, and round into the front yard; the flower pot was gone. My hostess had not removed it, I knew. I had already woven a little plot of the heroine of which should be a sweet, blue eyed blonde, the owner of the heliotrope. Blondes were my favorites, and this lady must be a Saxon beauty.

At supper, a slight, dark girl came and sat down at table opposite me. She stared a deliberate, inquiring look upon me, and then she ate her supper, never even glancing my way again. It was very provoking; that prolonged look seemed to satisfy her that I was so very ordinary appearing that there was no need of bestowing on me another glance. I think I looked at her during the whole meal; I could not help it. Her dark face drew my eyes, and unconsciously challenged them to pursue it. Her eyes were large and dark, the darkness seeming to lie principally in the great power of expansion in the pupil, which was luminous and soft; so it was then, though I afterward learned that it did not always possess that quality.

I launched several topics of conversation, watching her meanwhile, hoping she would favor my frail bark with fair wind, but she did no such thing; she sat indifferently, and saw every little conversational venture sink down disabled without saying a word to save it. I mentioned a number of places I had visited, in the forlorn hope that I might hit upon one she had seen, and that she might manifest it. At last I spoke of hearing a celebrated lecturer at a certain town. At the mention of the man's name her whole countenance darkened like a cloud where one expects to see lightning playing, but she did not look up, and I saw no lightning.

"I won't go away from here till I have found you out and made you talk," I said to myself, when she rose from the table and left the room without having articulated a single word.

So on the impulse of the moment, because this woman had wounded my vanity, I made that resolve whose execution changed my life as completely as lives can be changed.

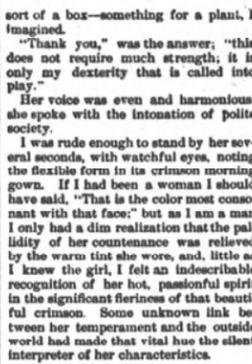

I devoted myself to my hostess, and finally retired to my room, with the agreeable conviction that I had made a good impression upon that lady, and that she would board me as long as I wanted to stay. I was to pay her a good price; perhaps that had something to do with her ready consent.

"Allow me to say to you, I am supposed to be stronger than you," I said the next morning when I found the young lady in the barn constructing, with hammer, boards and nails, some sort of a box—something for a plant, I imagined.

"Thank you," was the answer; "this does not require much strength; it is only my dexterity that is called into play."

Her voice was even and harmonious; she spoke with the intonation of polite society.

I was rude enough to stand by her several seconds, with watchful eyes, noting the flexible form in its crimson morning gown. If I had been a woman I should have said, "That is the color most consonant with that face; but as I am a man I only had a dim realization that the pallidness of her countenance was relieved by the warm tint she wore, since little as I knew the girl, I felt an indescribable recognition of her hot, passionate spirit in the significant firmness of that beautiful crimson. Some unknown link between her temperament and the outside world had made that vital hue the silent interpreter of her characteristics.

"Allow me to assist you."

As I looked at her, she raised her hammer and struck it on a nail she was holding in place; the nail glanced from its position, and she drew it through with the flesh part of one of the fingers of her left hand. I uttered an exclamation, and endeavored to take the hammer from her hand. She smiled a little strange smile, and clenched her fingers over the handle to prevent my getting it—then she drew the nail from her bleeding finger and pounded it in its place with an energy that had something of spite in it.

"What can one do with such a woman as that?" almost burst from my lips, so impetuously did it cross my mind.

She rose from her knees and began binding up her hand with her handkerchief very tenderly, and with an expression of soft, self pity on her face. I took the hand in mine and swathed it in the gossamer handkerchief; as I did so I saw a name marked in its corner. Thinking that if I wanted to know her I must take advantage of every circumstance I scrutinized the marking and read aloud—"Viviane Clare."

"Excuse me, Miss Clare," I said; "I know I am very rude, but I wish to become possessed of the right to speak to you, and you see I am bold enough to seize the first opportunity of learning your name."

She withdrew her hand with a suddenness that was almost a jerk, and instantly became absorbed in tending it again.

"I wish I had persisted in my intention of doing your carpentering for you," I said.

"I suppose you think if you had persisted you would have succeeded, don't you?" she asked, with a laugh that was very musical, while it was slightly satirical.

"I realize now that I should have been deterred by my humane desire," I replied. "You have not yet pardoned me for discovering your name by stratagem," I continued. "In atonement let me tell you that the name by which men know me is Jarl Perrom."

I bowed as I ceased speaking; she did not look up to perceive it; she only said: "Thank you, Mr. Perrom," with an indescribable accent of polite derision, that pierced me like sharp steel.

"I hope you will experience no evil effects from the wound," I said, lowering my eyelids to hide my vexed eyes. "With your permission, I will lead my horse from the stall, as he wants grooming."

I thought she would go out at that; but she said:

"I don't mind it," and turned to her board and nails again.

There she crouched, graceful as a couchant leopard, fumbling with her bandaged left hand, and making quick, telling strokes with her right. I never groomed a horse with so distracted a mind before. Under my hands he grew pettish and fractious, and I narrowly escaped being kicked several times. At length in a pet, I tied him up to his crib, and was turning to come out, when Miss Clare spoke. Apparently she had not looked at me before since I took the horse out.

"She said, with mirthful voice: 'You have given that horse rope enough to get tangled about his fore legs if he is so inclined, and cause a catastrophe.' With a burning face I saw my blunder, and rectified it, feeling very much like chopping off my hands for having been so awkward."

"I confess I am not used to being my own groom," I said; "your knowledge is as useful as it is uncommon."

She did not reply, and as I had no pretense to stay longer, I stalked out of the barn, with a furtive, secret word in my mind as to whether she was going to transplant her heliotrope, for she seemed now preparing to fill her box with earth. I settled the question, however, with a grunt of sarcasm, by muttering to myself that "she was going to have another woman's plant to dawdle over."

I had to admit, though, that she did not look like a woman to dawdle about anything.

With this admission in my mind I went into the house, and looked round for the heliotrope. I found it by a sunny window.

For some reason I liked this plant.

Something in its royal violet appealed to me as the insignia of Miss Clare's idiosyncrasies; its rich perfume was the fitting aroma of her imperial nature; it bore itself as the princely gnaton of the hosts of her heart and head, under such an enigmist I already wish to miss. I thought with a smile; that, though Miss Clare was not a blonde, yet I would like to follow her standard.

"You like flowers, I suppose, Mrs. Jordan," I said to my hostess, as I stood over the blossom, inhaling with epicurean breaths its incomparable richness.

"Yes, well enough. But I never should think of fussing about that thing as Miss Clare does. She brought it away from home with her, and has taken the greatest care of it ever since."

"Then this is not her home," I remarked indifferently.

"Oh, no; she only boards here for a while."

"Mrs. Jordan is right," spoke Miss Clare's beautiful voice from the doorway. "I am here as long as I wish to stay. My home is in Boston."

Was it her particular province to decompose and confuse me? If it had been, she could not have succeeded more entirely.

I looked down at the girl's eyes and said:

"You have discovered that I am interested in you."

"I have discovered that you experience a feeling, which, if you were a woman, I should surely call curiosity," she answered, advancing toward me and stopping by her plant, fondling it with dainty fingers.

"I don't like to have you call the feeling by that name," I said, with an air that implied that she could awaken a stronger sensation than mere curiosity. I found that every such gallant attempt was lost upon her.

She looked up in my face and indifferently asked:

"Why not? Does the imputation wound your dignity?"

I noted that, now that the pupils were contracted, her eyes were hazel gray. I replied to her Yankee directness by an indistinct murmur, for in truth I did not know what to say. Then I remarked:

"Your heliotrope is getting too large for this pot; you must transplant it; unless you want it to blossom itself to death."

"Yes, it was for this pet of mine that I was wounded this morning; I am going to put it in a box to-morrow. It will flourish greenly and bless me with sweetness in return for my love. It is not human at all, Mr. Perrom."

"You are too young to be a cynic," I said, secretly glad of this remark she had volunteered, and astonished at myself that I was so glad.

"It is not years that make a cynic," was the reply; "it is life, and there is so much of life sometimes in a day."

I did not hazard a response to that remark, though I wished to speak in terms I feared she would resent as too personal. A silence of several minutes followed. The harsh lines around her mouth, the retrospective appearance of her face, made me imagine her to be thinking of something disagreeable in her past.

At last I said:

"Can I be of any assistance in transplanting to-morrow?"

Her face did not change as she said:

"Thank you, none whatever," and walked away.

What vagary had taken possession of me, prompting me to like this girl? Something that I felt would soon develop itself into that which would prove more vital than a mere freak. Though I could not, with any reason, decide why I had become so conscious of this attraction, yet I felt it to be, if erratic as lightning, as powerful and as sure to its mark. I did not love the girl. I do not think I believe in the idea of the growth of anything so complete, so perfect as love, in one or two days. I do not deny the possibility for some natures, where the whole previous life seems to have been attuned by invisible hands for this meeting and this love. But for me, who have groped in earth's dryness and dustiness, I did not expect a sudden purification for the reception of the glorious guest.

I had been at the isolated farm house a fortnight, and had seen very little of Miss Clare. In the meantime, when I sat at my reading or writing I occasionally heard the report of a pistol from somewhere back of the house. For a long time I wondered what boy or young man was practicing shooting, or what pigeons and quails were suffering from his expertise. At last, one morning, as an incessant "crack, crack" came up against my window, I took my little revolver from its case and went out in search of the marksman. The air was cool and frosty and came against my face with the very essence of winter in it. Hurrying on to keep warm, I came upon Miss Clare, who was standing about a dozen paces from a target board nailed upon a tree. When I came up she was standing with her face turned from me, loading her pistol. She wore a short, loose, double breasted fur jacket and a fur cap. The cap did not become her; her face was too proudly, coldly out for such a half jaunty thing. I took out my own pistol, and examined it, while she asked me if I was a good shot.

"Ordinary," I answered.

"Well, let me see," she said, and stood aside for me to take her place and shoot. I did so, and was sufficiently mortified as seeing that my shot went so wide of the mark as to emphasize my remark that I was ordinarily skilled. However, I knew I could do better and I fired two more charges, both of which went full upon the eye of the target.

"That is a great deal better than I can do," remarked Miss Clare, stepping up and firing with so little appearance of taking aim that I wondered her bullet came so near—within a quarter of an inch of the mark. We practiced for half an hour, and I proved myself more clever at the art than Miss Clare. I wished to offer myself as instructor and companion, but the fear of being repulsed prevented me. I might have dispensed with that diffidence, for, when we were returning to the house, she asked:

"Initiate me into the mysteries, will you?"

"Of Eleusis?" inquired I, laughing and wondering what she meant.

She replied with ready tongue:

"No; I have the insufficient key of Aeschylus for that. I mean I want Mr. Perrom to teach me to shoot."

"You can shoot now."

"You require experience, I see. I want you to teach me how to hit the mark when I do shoot. Will you?"

I believe I concealed the exultation which those words gave me. I only answered:

"With pleasure."

"When shall we commence?" she asked.

"To-morrow," I said.

All day I had a to-morrow to which to look forward. I confess to the childishness of thinking as often as once every quarter hour that the next day I was to practice shooting with Miss Clare. I believe I should not have had occasion to accuse myself of this had I been anywhere else than in this solitary place, where there were but few outside influences to intrude themselves upon me. I had seen but two carriages upon the road since my arrival there, and after my morning gallop over long stretches of brown field, I had nothing to do but read, write and think. I was often in the mood at that period of my life, when, if I was idle for any length of time, my thoughts became as errant as my material nature was childish; they would persist in wandering to that which they liked best. Now my emotions or my roused interest were the waymarks, all pointing to the path my thoughts should take—everything made me think, almost with a painful exclusiveness, of Miss Clare. I had nearly reached my thirtieth year, and I could not say to extreme youth a concentration of thought which I had never before experienced in regard to a woman.

A sudden flow of the blood through my veins, a heavy thudding of my temples when I went to bed that night, gave promise of something beside an accurate eye and true aim for the morning. The next day's sunlight, when it came in on my face through the window, fell with cruel brightness upon eyes which had not slept through the night. I felt that I was either very ill or was getting ready to be so. I was determined to rise and go down stairs, however, and after repeated failures I at length succeeded in reaching, and when I had rested awhile I started for the stairway. How I ever got down those stairs I never knew, but I fainted dead away at the bottom. I remember, when the first sensation of faintness came upon me, that my mind framed a curse that my man's strength should have left me. Before I could shape my lips to utter the imprecation they were powerless to do so. A sprinkling of water on my face and a wet hand on my forehead were the first sensations of returning consciousness. Before I had power to open my eyes I hoped the hand was Miss Clare's. I had a dim idea that it was soft, and, consequently, must be hers.

I opened my eyes, and in the dusky light of the passageway I saw that Miss Clare was beside me.

"We shall not shoot this morning, shall we, Mr. Perrom, since you are so provoking as to be ill?" was the first remark she made, softly bathing my forehead in the meantime.

"Perhaps you shall," I said, writing from her hand. "This accused faintness may pass away in a little while."

I ground my teeth in a rage at my incapacity.

"The sickness will hardly go away to-day, I think. Can you rise?" she asked.

"I think so."

I made a cumbersome movement to stand up, but should have failed in the effort had not Miss Clare taken my hands and assisted me. Ill and half-conscious as I was, I vividly felt the firm, warm clasp of her slender fingers. It was the first time our hands had met. Conscious of the present wish that they might never more be strangers, I said, faintly and earnestly:

"I really hope, Miss Clare, that you are as really as I that I cannot accompany you this evening—and that is hoping for the best."

I leaned against the lower part of the balusters, and looked through the dim light at my companion. It seemed to me that her haughty mouth was softened somewhat—that her eyes were less distant in their splendor. She was going to be kind to the sick man, however she might be to him when he was well.

"I am very sorry, Mr. Perrom; more sorry that you are ill. I am afraid you have over exerted yourself in some way. Perhaps you have written too much; I have guessed that you write a great deal."

There was so ennobling, subtle a sweetness in her voice, that I acknowledged to myself, as I weakly stood, supported by the stair case, that I would willingly endure an illness for the sake of hearing it. Those tones murmured in all cadences through my wild dreams for the next few weeks. Musical and kind as were her words, I could not but own that it was not a music for me alone; it was not the exclusive harmony for one heart only—it was the kindness of her womanly nature toward all suffering, and she was so gifted as to be able to display it more bountifully than some women.

"Though I have written much," I said, "I cannot accuse myself of over exertion. If I have offended against the laws of health, it has been unconsciously."

She came a step nearer and said, somewhat hastily:

"I do not know why I have allowed you to stand so long in this cold hall. You should have known better. Allow me to assist you to your room, then I will send Mrs. Jordan to attend to you. Now try to get up these stairs; take my arm—lean heavily; do not fear—I am strong."

I obeyed her implicitly; had I wished to do otherwise, I had not the power. At every other step I stopped and sternly, intensely tried to steady my quivering limbs and availing head. It was useless—I could not do it. At one of these

A LESSON FROM THE FIRE.

It is generally recognized that the fire of last Sunday evening was a sort of blessing in disguise, when viewed in a public sense, provided proper use is made of the lesson it conveyed. Of course there is sympathy for the individual losers in this disaster, but the owners of the buildings destroyed will soon find themselves better off than they were before, as the erection of a handsome brick block in the place of wooden structures will make them so.

The lesson which may be derived from this conflagration, as well as from the smaller one that preceded it, is that the fire protection we have is worth far more than its cost and that we may add to this cost with profit. Judicious expenditure in providing protection against fire will be an exercise of wisdom and prudence. The purchase of further implements should not be delayed, especially hooks and ladders. It should be made possible to remove with despatch any frame structure that may endanger a neighboring block of more value.

THE STATE SCHOOL.

The committee appointed by the governor to select a site for the state scientific school has been in session for the past week, and a visit has been made to various parts of the state. After making a tour of inspection the committee came to Yakima to conclude its deliberations. It has received and considered propositions from various places and has industriously and conscientiously endeavored, no doubt, to serve the best interests of the state in making a selection. Ample provision in land and money having been made for this institution it is not understood to be the wish or intention that the committee should make the location of this school depend upon bids or anything in the nature of pecuniary inducements. Viewed in this light, it ought not need much argument to convince the committee and the public that this central city of Yakima is by large odds the best place for the location of a great public institution. It is of easy access from both sides of the state and has climate, soil and surroundings peculiarly suitable. As the most prominent feature of this school will probably be its agricultural college, no place in the state would afford quite as favorable opportunity for experimental farming as this. The peculiar feature of Yakima as an agricultural country is its great variety of products. It not only produces grain equal to the best grain growing sections, but a great many other articles that can not be raised in most countries. The staples here are grain, hay, stock, hops, fruit, tobacco and vegetables of all kinds. Besides these, a vast number of things may be raised in this soil and climate that can not possibly be grown in ordinary countries. Irrigation makes farming a certainty from year to year and affords opportunity for interesting experiment.

This is no less favorable a site for a mining school, as it is midway between the principal mining regions of the state. It is, in fact, difficult to perceive why Yakima has not, in every respect, superior advantages for the state scientific school now about to be located.

GEORGE FRANCIS TRAM finished his trip around the world on Saturday evening, May 24th, having consumed sixty-seven days, thirty-two hours, three minutes and three seconds in the journey. According to the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, he was wild over not having a Northern Pacific special train provided for him at New York, and he damned Tacoma, Radebaugh, C. B. Wright, the Tacoma Land Co. and the Northern Pacific railroad up and down. He is still at Tacoma, and there is no telling when the good people of that city will be rid of him, for he has all of the qualifications of the barnacle and a number of very disagreeable ones which are peculiar to himself.

WANTED—A girl to do housework in a small family. Apply to this office, or at the residence of J. A. Beck, one mile north of Yakima City.

THEY WILL DECIDE SATURDAY.

The Agricultural College Commissioners Enjoining the Climate and Entertainment of Yakima.

Hon. E. C. Ferguson of Snohomish, Hon. T. J. Smith of Colfax, and Hon. Edward Whitson of Yakima, the commissioners appointed by Governor Ferry to locate the scientific school and college of agriculture, arrived from Spokane Falls Tuesday evening. Carriages were awaiting and the party was driven to the Hotel Yakima, where a lunch had been spread. The commissioners were tired from their journey and did not linger long. They had visited Walla Walla, Dayton, Spokane Falls, Pullman and Colfax, and each place had wine and dined them and put its best foot forward, and they had come to Yakima to take their final stand and make their decision. Here they were followed by Levi Ankeny, Frank W. Paine and Mayor N. G. Block of Walla Walla, J. H. Bellinger and S. J. Chadwick of Colfax, H. H. Wolf and R. G. Newland of Dayton, and Dr. H. J. Webb of Pullman.

On Wednesday the commissioners and their followers from other towns were taken in carriages to the Moxee plantation to note the system of irrigation followed there and the growing crops of hops, tobacco and alfalfa. Before returning to the city the steam dairy of Scudder & Hubbard was visited and the blooded cattle and pigs inspected. That evening the commissioners were tendered a reception at the Yakima Club, where they were met by many citizens. In one of the ante-rooms (pun premeditated) a collection of fruits, vegetables, grasses, grains and flowers had been gathered that afternoon and it of course greatly pleased our guests, for, although little time was taken in gathering up the products, it was very creditable and indicated the wealth which quickens in our soil with the labor of the husbandman. The following day was spent in viewing the beautiful Abnatanum valley and visiting the various sites offered the state for the village buildings and experimental farms. Memorial day was observed by the commission in noting the procession and in social pleasures. The decision is to be made Saturday and to-night a big delegation is expected from Spokane with a proposition and to press the claims of that place.

VIEW OF THE SEA FIRE.

I have for sale at Janeck's drug store and at my car, views of the great fire of Sunday night. Everybody should get one and keep as a memento; size 10x1. inches, at 75 cents each. Call and see them, at the photo car or Janeck's drug store. W. A. BRADLEY.

—Robert Crory returned from Gray's Harbor, Saturday. He says property valuations are very fluctuating owing to conflicting railroad rumors. Some weeks ago he was offered $3,000 for a lot he owns there. A short time afterwards $1,800 were the highest figures proffered, but just before leaving this amount had been increased to $2,500. He says, further, that it is the belief over there that G. W. Hunt is being backed by the Union Pacific.

A Card of Thanks.—After the experiences of the night of the 25th of May:

Remembering the untiring exertions of our firemen, the vigilant care and watchfulness of the police, the unflinching, persistent efforts of all citizens, any particular words of praise are almost out of place; yet the city of North Yakima, with due regard and thankfulness for the unceasing, systematic labors of all, can not allow the public spirit and zeal of the officers and members of Company A, Second Regiment, N. G. W., to pass unnoticed.

R. K. NICHOLS, Mayor. O. A. FECHTER, Clerk. North Yakima, May 29th, 1906.

The dining room of the Hotel Washington is being subdivided to be used by Wm. Shearer and W. F. Jones.

The county commissioners have laid over until the August term the petition of J. H. Thomas and others praying for a special election to submit the question of building a new court house to cost $50,000.

NORTH YAKIMA'S BIG FIRE.

A Dozen Wooden Buildings Incinerated.

A List of the Losses, Insurance, and Incidents of the Occasion.

Yakima, which had so long escaped any serious scorching from fire, came in for a good-sized dose of it on Sunday evening last, when all of the frame buildings on Yakima avenue from Lowe's block to Front street and from the corner to the new city hall building were leveled in ashes.

It is a little bit uncertain how the fire started, whether the lamp in the kitchen of Harris' restaurant exploded, or was knocked from its bracket and broken. Mrs. Harris, who was waiting upon a customer, says she "thinks she heard something pop," but paid no attention to it until she went into the kitchen and saw the burning oil on the table.

A determined stand was made by the firemen at Lowe's brick, and though it looked dubious at one time the flames were finally arrested. At this point the heat was so intense that the mosquitoes were kept covered with wet blankets to prevent their burning.

W. F. Jones valued his saddlery stock and household furniture at about two thousand dollars. On the former he carried an insurance of $400 and on the latter $100. He saved goods invoicing over five hundred dollars, so if he gets all of the insurance money he figures his loss at $700.

The building occupied by J. T. Foster as a neat market was owned by Wayne Field, who carried an insurance of $30,000. Mr. Foster estimates his loss at $13,000, on which there was an insurance of $6,000. He has moved his shop into temporary quarters across the street.

A short time ago J. P. and E. Wheeler bought the Star coffee house from W. H. Carpenter. They carried no insurance whatever, and their loss will amount to about $80. The building was a portion of the George W. Goodwin estate and was one of those brought up from the old town. On it and the adjoining building occupied by H. Keuchler, and a part of the same property, there was an insurance of $500.

Mr. Keuchler, the jeweler, was one of the heaviest losers by the fire. He carried a splendid stock valued at $12,000, of which $6,000 worth was in the safe and as the safe—a Wiltshire—was warranted fire-proof his insurance of $17,000 was placed on the clocks, silverware, and such goods as could not be placed in the safe.

Wednesday there were many pieces of jewelry damaged and the watch movements were all ruined. The loss to the goods in the safe will amount to $3000, and Mr. Keuchler proposes to sue the safe company for damages.

The loss of S. Harris will amount to three or four hundred dollars. He carried no insurance. The building was owned by A. Churchill. Mr. Churchill was one of the main losers by the fire. He estimates his loss at $900, on which there is an insurance of $300. His safe contained money, watches, county warrants and notes, in all several thousand dollars' worth of property, which came through the fire unharmed.

Theodore Steiner's building, occupied by Wm. Shearer as a barber shop, was a total loss. This building was worth $1200 and there was no insurance on it. Although Mr. Shearer saved his chairs and a few minor articles, he estimates his loss at $1100 less $500 insurance. This includes his household goods and clothing.

The old Capital restaurant building on Front street was owned by Mrs. Carrie H. Core, of Roxabell, Ohio. It was insured for $1000. The building was occupied by J. W. Walters as a restaurant, who saved but little. He carried no insurance, and his loss will amount to $800.

T. J. V. Clark's two buildings and general store went the way of their neighbors. Mr. Clark estimates his loss at $3000; insurance $1000. Mr. Clark says he will rebuild as soon as he can make the necessary arrangements.

The losses on the south side of Yakima avenue are reckoned as follows: Shardless & McDaniel, $300; Theo. Steiner, $300; J. A. Tugard, $200; Jacob Verrier, $150; M. B. Kirkman $50; A. J. Krauslet, $100; T. J. Redfield, $40.

There were a number of amusing incidents connected with the fire which brought forth laughs notwithstanding the seriousness of the occasion. Some man took a plaster-of-paris horse from M. G. Wills' burning saloon building, carefully carried it a block off and dropped it, breaking the image in two.

R. Strobach was another excited individual. He found a setting hen in a shed back of T. J. V. Clark's building. Gathering up the eggs he placed them in his hat, passed the hat to some hobo on the outside, who threw out the eggs and wore the hat off.

When the fire was the hottest Dr. C. J. Taft was to be seen on the top of his drug store with a sprinkling pot about as large as a pint measure. The spray nozzle was on and the doctor was as gravely and calmly sprinkling his property as if he had been among the flowers which adorn his windows.

The new steamer paid for itself Sunday evening. The wisdom of the late council cropped out conspicuously in that particular. Marshal Cook did good work at the fire. He had the water of the ditches under complete control and the supply was ample throughout. He was also alert in quelling an explosion.

Considerable liquor saved from Churchill's and Wills' was stolen, and the rounders were getting well cocked and primed for a night of it when their supply ran out and the saloon men, with a commendable exhibition of public spirit, refused to open their doors or give anyone a drink.

Al Churchill found two twenty dollar gold pieces in the ashes of his saloon building. One of them was badly melted, which indicates that the heat was intense, because gold coin is one of the hardest things to melt.

The popping of bottles at Al Churchill's place Sunday night was one of the incidents of the fire. It sounded like the fusillade of battle.

The N. P. depot was badly scorched, and it was only by means of a good wetting that it was saved from fire.

The lumber yards of George Nevin and Scott & Co. on the west side of the track had a narrow escape. Burning pieces of wood as large as a hat fell among the lumber with alarming frequency.

The engine on the start got clogged up with too much fine coal, but G. M. McKinney, who is an experienced engineer, turned in and soon had the machine working in splendid style.

Survival of the Fittest.

In going out of Savannah the cars were pretty well crowded, but a drummer for a Philadelphia house had pre-empted two seats just the same, and was taking these mighty cool. Just after leaving the depot he went into the car ahead on some errand, and he had no sooner disappeared than the drummer for a New York house took the vacated seats.

"By heavens! but you are a cool one!" he gasped, as he took in the situation. "Thanks," replied the other, as he lifted his hat. "Please repeat in a loud voice, so that all can hear."

"What do you mean?" "Speak of the coolness of the thing as loud as you can. It will be a big ad for me."

"An ad?" "Certainly. I represent the artificial ice machines of Blank, Blank & Co., and you can throw me $500 worth of advertising and not hurt yourself a bit."

"I'll see you and your machines and your ice in — first!" exclaimed the Philadelphian, as he gathered up his traps and took half a seat and stalked for the next fifty miles.—New York Sun.

Then Listen for Gabriel's Men.

It is to be hoped that some time we shall obtain an elevation of our politics, and our politicians shall see that the true rivalry of parties must be as to which is most enlightened, honest and careful of the public rights, instead of which is the most dishonest, reckless, and ready to disregard principles for the sake of party.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

BROKEN OUT!

How often do we see this on the faces of children and, alas, of people who otherwise are healthy? What causes it? Bad Blood. The thought is terrible; the trouble is worse. No ordinary help can remove it. It requires something unusual. Do not take cheap arsenicals or blood purifiers. You must have something that has proven its power in both Europe and America. General Whistcroft Nelson, of London, says: "My experience in the English army, as well as in America, convinces me that nothing so thoroughly purifies the blood, or adds to the health, vigor and life, as Dr. Achey's Blood-Flower Elixir."

This grand Elixir is sold by druggists in all parts of America. It is a good, pure, honest medicine. Try it to-day. SOLD BY ALLEN & CHAPMAN, Sole Agents, North Yakima, Wash.

SUNSHINE AND STORM.

I mused in my heart at the meadow-lark's song,
So sweetly, so gently it rang o'er the field,
And I thought, what a life full of cheer must belong
To this soft-throated warbler, such glad-notes to yield!
I envied the joy in the meadow-lark's heart,
So sadly, so sharply it crossed with my own,
And I fancied the lark bewailed my sad part,
From the low, mournful music I caught in its tone!
As I sit by my hearth, some storm-ridden night,
And my children range 'round me, in light-
hearted glee,
I shall pity this meadow-lark's snow-pelted
breast,
As it braves the cold blast on the frost-covered lea!

KING BABY.

AUTHORSHIP UNKNOWN.

Fair baby,
My baby,
Come down from above,
The lark seems to sing it,
The curlew to ring it,
The heavens are whispering of love—
Yes, of love—
Baby,
My baby,
Come down from above.
White baby,
Dead baby,
I kiss thy pale brow,
Dost thou grieve for my loss?
'Canst thou feel for my cross?
May'st thou love me, thy mother, now?
She means now—
Baby,
My baby,
As she kisses thy brow,
King baby,
Saint baby!
God took thee from me,
For my good and thy gain,
For thy joy and my pain—
Till the angel called Death
Sets me free,
And I see,
O baby,
My baby,
To see God and then—thee.

Ellensburg's All Night.

The suspension of the Daily Register and the profusion of plate matter in the weekly speak rather dubiously for the future of that hitherto bustling city. It is said that the recently destroyed car shops will not be replaced there, but will be built at Cle-Elum. This, and the loss of the Big Bend trade through approaching railroads from the east, may be considered as so many brass nails with round heads in a box labelled Ellensburg. The above from the Waterville Immigrant was headed "Comfort for Yakima," but that paper entirely mistakes the attitude of Yakima and her people for the plucky little city to our north. Yakima has only the most friendly feeling for Ellensburg, and while there has been somewhat of a rivalry between the two places as to growth and business supremacy, no section of the state would hear of Ellensburg's misfortune with more genuine regret and sorrow than Yakima, and THE HERALD believes it voices the sentiments of the people of Yakima when it makes this statement. Ellensburg had an unfortunate fire, and naturally she is feeling the effects of that calamity; but as to there being any "brass nails" driven into her, or that her hardships are more than temporary, we cannot for a minute believe, for the town has good resources at her back and an energetic and sturdy population.

SLIGHTLY PERSONAL.

The String of Questions That Will Soon be Asked Us.

Within a few days the inhabitants of this city and every other resident of the United States are likely to be asked a series of questions more or less of a personal nature, and persons who have been accustomed to mind their own business, and have objected to outside assistance, may be provoked to wrath by some of these queries. It will be well for them to remember that the persons who, in their wisdom, have framed these questions are acting under the authority of Uncle Sam, who sometimes shelters queer birds, and are secured against public resentment by certain laws which will assist them in obtaining their desired answers. The purpose of the questions is all right, and, as they have to be answered only once in ten years, perhaps a good-natured public won't object so very much. Here they are:

- Christian name in full and initial of middle name.
- Surname.
- Whether a soldier, sailor or marine during the civil war (United States or confederate), or widow of such person.
- Relationship to head of family.
- Whether white, black, mulatto, quadroon, octoroon, Chinese or Japanese, or Indian.
- Sex.
- Age at nearest birthday. If under 1 year give age in months.
- Whether single, married, widowed or divorced.
- Whether married during the census year (June 1, 1889, to May 31, 1890).
- Mother of how many children and number of those children living.
- Place of birth.
- Place of birth of father and mother.
- Number of years in the United States.
- Whether naturalized.
- Whether naturalization papers have been taken out.
- Profession, trade or occupation.
- Months unemployed during the census year.
- Attendance at school during the census year.
- Able to read; able to write.
- Able to speak English. If not, the language or dialect spoken.
- Whether suffering from acute or chronic disease, with name of disease and length of time afflicted.
- Whether defective in mind, sight, hearing or speech, or whether crippled, maimed or deformed, with name of defect.
- Whether a prisoner, convict, homeless child or pauper.
- Is the house you live in hired, or is it owned by the head or by a member of the family.
- If owned by the head or a member of the family, is the house free from mortgage incumbrance?

I. M. KAUTZ, Register.

The Weight of Individuals.

The average weight of a boy at birth is seven and that of a girl a little more than six pounds. When they have attained the full development of man or womanhood they should weigh twenty times as much as they did at birth. This would make a man's average weight 140 and a woman about 125. The height of a male at birth is 1 foot 7 inches and that of a female 1 foot 6 inches. Fully grown a man's height should be about three and a half times greater than at birth, or 5 feet 9 inches, while a woman should be 5 feet 3 inches. The weight of individuals who are fully developed and well formed, however, varies within extremes, which are nearly as 1 to 2, while their height varies within limits which at most are as 1 to 1-3. Taking 200 pounds as the maximum of man's weight and 85 as the minimum we would have the average of 142 $\frac{1}{2}$ pounds. Placing the maximum weight of woman at 185 pounds and the minimum at 70 pounds, and we get an average of 127 $\frac{1}{2}$ pounds.

The Circus.

McMahon's New United Shows. This much heralded combination will be with us at North Yakima on Saturday, June 7. The excellent character of entertainment always given by the above show recommends it to the lovers of sawdust novelties. The small boy and the larger man needs a circus occasionally in his business and we can suggest no better antidote for the craving than a visit to the above show. That this is among the few legitimate arenic exhibitions traveling cannot be denied, and now with its allied attractions must arouse a desire on the part of many who are not in the habit of attending shows to see its many wonders. We are assured by those who ought to know that there is much of unusual interest to the spectator. Every man, woman and child in a radius of many miles will want to see the performance given by the largest elephants in the world.
