Serious Wonders of the Great Northern.
The Pacific extension of the Great Northern railway promises to be as rich in scenic wonders as the Canadian Pacific. It is the only transcontinental road that reaches the summit of the Rocky mountains on what is known in engineering as a 1 per cent. grade or one foot to the 100. The extension leaves the main line at Havre, a town seven miles east of Fort Assiniboine, and runs through the Pigeon Indian reservation over the "great divide." It has been found necessary to build over Cutbank river a trestle 149 feet in height and 1500 feet in length, and across the canyon of Two Medicine river a trestle 212 feet in height and 751 in length. The latter is said to be the highest wooden trestle in America. No tunneling has been made in the route over the mountains. From the summit down to Essex, 18 miles distant, the grade attains the maximum—1.8 per cent., or 95 feet to the mile. The maximum curvature is 10 degrees.

ATE HIS OWN HORSE.
The Good Old Times in Walla Walla—A Capital Story That Was Told by Gen. James McAuliff.

The Union-Journal of Walla Walla gives an entertaining story which was furnished by Gen. James McAuliff. All the old timers in Yakima know, or should know, McAuliff for he was mayor of Walla Walla for a number of terms, and before that he was an old army campaigner throughout this country in Indian days. Jim, as all his friends know him, is a most genial soul and the life of all social gatherings. He is fiercer from way back, having blown the whistle throughout the Mexican war, and he still plays with all the vigor and skill that he did in his early days, but then he needs no introduction so here is the Union-Journal's effusion: "Speaking of old times and dancing," said Gen. James McAuliff, who packed some of the dirt into the country out of which the Blue mountains are made, "back in the early winter of '62 me and Wallace Greenwall and Bill Terry went down to Frenchtown to a five-gallon dance."
"What is a five-gallon dance?" asked a bystander.
"You see," said McAuliff, "in those days Frenchtown held about all the women in the valley and they were half-breeds and squaws, and the boys used to go down there for a dance. If they took along five gallons of whiskey they had a good time and all kept reasonably sober, while, if they took ten gallons they had a big drunk as well as a dance. Well, on this time, of which I am telling you, Greenwall rode a pinto horse that was as fat as butter. We hitched our horses to hay rick and went to a house and danced and got rid of the five gallons. Next morning, after a hearty breakfast of fat meat and saleratus bread, we went out to get our horses to go home. But Greenwall's horse was gone. Hunting around we found its head and hide near by. You see, the blamed Frenchmen, who liked fat horse meat better than poor beef, had killed Greenwall's horse and given part of him to us for breakfast. And it was good meat, too," concluded the general, with a hearty laugh in which all joined.

OF INTEREST TO EVERY TAX PAYER.
The New Tax Law in a Nutshell—Property Sold for Taxes Not Redeemable.

Taxes become payable the first of this month and will be delinquent after March 1, according to the new revenue law. The only difference between the present taxpaying system and the old is the 3 per cent rebate which holds good during the month of December. After that the full amount has to be collected. The person whose taxes are $100 under this system is required to pay only $97, as the 3 per cent is deducted. January 1 the rebate will expire. During January and February taxes are still payable, though not delinquent. After the first of March a penalty of 10 per cent is added to assessments, and property that is sold for delinquent taxes is not redeemable by the prior owner. It is sold under execution in like manner as property attached by mortgage creditors. The amount in excess of that required for the payment of taxes is left in the county treasury subject to the claim of the owner.

CHAS. E. MONROE, who was put off the N. P. train at Prosser, on the 10th of October, has brought suit in King county for $6000 damages, which he claims to have sustained through bruises to body and reputation and losses by being delayed in his business.

Yakima lodge, No. 22, I. O. O. F. held its annual election on Friday evening, Dec. 4th, which resulted in the selecting of the following officers: Wm. Roof, noble grand; J. P. McCafferty, vice grand; Al Churchill, recording secretary; Harry Spinning, permanent secretary; G. O. Nevin, treasurer; and Joseph Stephenson, trustee.

A young married man says that many old bachelors remain old bachelors because they hear so much complaint about babies. The fact is that a baby is not one-quarter the trouble it is charged with being. A young couple can get along with one if they try. Papa can sit up half the night with it and mamma can sit up the other half. What could be simpler.

Col. Howlett has disposed of his St. Bernard dog, "Bumble," to Dr. Hag. Bumble hasn't the best disposition in the world, and his former owner kept him chained, while the doctor allows him his liberty, having a theory that he has inaugurated a system of reformation. Bumble's reformation started in with whipping all the dogs in town and then holding up for half the night a man who was trying to get from the bill to the city.

She was smart and she was pretty, and her elders thought her witty, and she tripped the "light fantastic" like a fairy; she could read both French and Latin, she looked sweet in a print or satin, and it made her sweetenings throb to hear her play. But in single life she tarried, and she never, never married, and she'll doubtless be a spinster till she dies; for she had a proud defiance to the culinary science, and she never learnt the mystery of pies!

W. H. Babcock, the wheat king of Eureka Flat, Walla Walla county passed through here recently and was greatly interested in accounts of the artesian well boring. He said he was keeping his eye on Yakima, in fact had some holdings in the country, and recognized that it was to be the banner hop center, orchard, and truck garden of the state whenever the time came that it was fully developed through means of irrigation. Mr. Babcock is a shrewd and far-sighted man, and he but voices the opinions of those who have given this section careful study.

D. H. Carey, the Roelyn attorney of the N. P., was sent to Eagle Gorge to investigate the land slide disaster and now he is probably sorry for it. He made statements to press representatives, and then wrote to the N. P. attorneys at Tacoma that his object was to "support previous positions taken by papers rather than disclose the facts." This has called down the wrath of the newspaper men upon his head and they want his scalp. The Press-Times says: "The Northern Pacific ought to cashier Mr. Carey at once. The people of the state will not tolerate the suppression of the facts. The whole truth must come out; human life may not be of very much consequence to Mr. Carey, but he must be taught that the facts and circumstances surrounding this accident must be revealed. No covering up of the truth will be tolerated, and the sooner the attorney learns this fact and bends his energies to the fullest discovery of that unfortunate fatality the better it will be not only for his reputation but for the company whose servant he is."

Randolph, the eldest son of the great and only Legh R. Freeman, of the Washington Farmer, was in the city last week for the purpose of collecting—that is, collecting accounts and material for a Yakima number of that paper. The young man says it is the understanding that his father is going to buy the Spokane Chronicle from J. J. Brown. If that is so the democrats will lose an able champion, as Freeman senior was never known to have any politics, and when he lived here frequently boasted that he had not even used the electric franchise.

Senator Allen is preparing a bill to provide for repayment to settlers within the mile limit of forfeited lands on the Northern Pacific road all money over $1.25 per acre. The price paid on all lands proved up by cash entries was double that amount. He will also endeavor to have a statute allowing timber to be cut from public lands for agricultural, mining and domestic purposes in that portion of Washington east of the Columbia river.

Col. L. S. Howlett is one of the incorporators of the Inland Construction and Equipment Co. The place of business of the company is Spokane, and the capital stock is $200,000. Its objects are to build, contract and equip, as a contractor, railways, steam-boats, barges, telephones and telegraphs in Washington, Idaho and Oregon. The incorporators other than Col. Howlett, reside in Portland and Spokane.

NORTH YAKIMA, Wash., Sept. 23, 1891.
I have resided in the Yakima Valley for 12 years, engaged in general farming, fruit and hop culture. I raise all my products by irrigation, and have never failed a single year in obtaining bountiful crops.
I farmed formerly in the State of Kansas. I find all kinds of husbandry here much more profitable than in Kansas. And as to climate, such things as blizzards and cyclones are not known. Our winters are very short, and the spring and fall are perfectly delightful. All our farmers who are industrious are prosperous and happy.
JOSEPH STEPHENSON,
President Board of County Commissioners, Yakima County.

NORTH YAKIMA, Wash., April 18, 1891.
D. E. Lesh, proprietor of the celebrated fruit farm called "Fruit Vale," swears that on one Alexander peach-tree grew, during the year 1890, five hundred and twenty pounds of peaches, which he sold for $52; that off four apple-trees twenty oz. pippins, he sold 100 boxes, 4,600 pounds, at $125. My whole orchard, between six and seven acres of peaches, apples, plums, pears and apricots, brought me, during the season of 1890, about three thousand dollars.

The Board of Immigration of North Yakima, Yakima County, State of Washington, authorizes the following statement as to crops and prices generally prevailing in the Yakima Valley:

Wheat,	50 to 60 bushels per acre, at 70 cents

Barley,	40 to 50 "
Potatoes,	300 to 600 "
Onions,	300 to 500 "
Hops,	1,500 to 2,000 lbs., from 12 to 30 cts. per lb.
Tobacco,	from 800 to 1,000 pounds at $1.00
Alfalfa,	6 to 9 tons per acre, at from $8 to $15
Clover,	2 to 9 "
Timothy,	2 to 4 "

Peaches, Apples, Plums, Apricots, Prunes, Nectarines, Grapes, Pears, Sweet Potatoes, Peanuts and all kinds of small fruits grow in great perfection. Eggs sell the year round at an average of 25 cts. per doz.; Chickens at from $3 to $5 per doz.; Butter at from 30 to 40 cts. per pound; Hogs from 4 to 6 cts. per pound on foot. Watermelons yield from $150 to $200 per acre.

Yakima County is surely the banner Agricultural County of the State. The Irrigation problem that has so long delayed the development of this favored section is successfully solved, and within twelve months great artesian well boring and canal companies have been organized and are at work. Thousands of acres have been reclaimed, and the heretofore arid lands of Yakima will blossom and bear fruit. This is the home of the Peach, Pear, Plum and Prune, Wheat, Oats, Barley, Hops, Hay and the choicest Vegetables of every description, Tobacco also being among the best paying products. Yakima County, from its geographical location, has cash markets for its produce in every direction, namely, Tacoma, Seattle, Spokane and Helena, $500 freight on watermelons having been paid the Northern Pacific railroad during the season just past. Over three thousand bales of the choicest Hops were raised and marketed in Yakima this year, and the shipping register here also shows that other of our products were shipped in astonishing quantities.

THE CHOICE WELL MADE.

The contest for the speakership of the house of representatives is ended. It was a battle of gladiators for a position that is next in import to the presidency.

Judge Charles F. Crip has long been recognized as a leader in the house. It was he who was unanimously delegated chairman of the committee on elections in the fiftieth congress.

He is an able parliamentarian, and his views on public questions are clear-cut and well taken. He is in favor of a modification of the tariff laws, a reduction of taxation, equal rights to all—special privileges to none, and the destruction of trusts.

SEATTLE is constantly furnishing surprises for the people of this state. She has given us the pugnacious J. C. Haines, the brilliant and erratic James Hamilton Lewis, a historical fire and a wonderful era of reconstruction, a Whitechapel district that was at once a curiosity and a crying disgrace, the greatest political schemer in Washington, and now she presents for our consideration a coroner who arrests a sheriff and brings him before a justice of the peace for contempt.

Spokane threatens to remember Eugene Wilson, of Ellensburg, if he aspires to become governor. Wilson published a paper called the Chinook, at Spokane, in 1889, and not receiving the patronage he thought he was entitled to suspended publication after writing a most scurrilous and unjust account of the business transactions there. Spokane is a big factor in state politics and she will make "Gene" think his chickens have come home to roost and brought the pip with them.

That sound people have experienced more moisture this fall and winter than for any year known to the oldest inhabitant, and recently when a bright old lady visited Seattle she remarked that the noble mountain, whose name is in dispute between the people of Seattle and Tacoma, must have been called Rainier because it was rainier there than in any other section of the globe.

JOHN L. SHARPE, a progressive young democrat of Walla, Walla, is frequently named as a candidate for congress, but he has recently been interviewed and says he would not accept the nomination, nor would his father, Judge Sharpe, accept the nomination for governor but might favorably consider a nomination for supreme judge.

That people of Pullman are petitioning the governor to remove J. H. Bellinger from the regency of the agricultural college. The portly Colfaxite was preparing to resign, but as he does not like to be driven to anything he now proposes to remain a regent.

That value of Whitman county's grain crop this year is figured at $10,172,500. This will furnish liberal pin money for the people of that section, and indirectly benefit the entire state.

OUR MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT.

What the Patriarchs of this Corporation Did at Their Last Meeting—Some Matters of General Interest.

The council met Monday evening in regular session, with the mayor and all members present excepting Councilman Cox.

Four petitions were presented, embracing requests for six arc lights, all of which were granted. The location of the lights are as follows: Corner C and Second streets, corner Natchez and Yakima streets, corner First and Chestnut streets, corner West A street and Kittitas avenue, corner West Walnut street and Wenas avenue, and corner West Walnut street and Rainer avenue. This makes 23 arc lights maintained by the city at a yearly cost of $3312.

An extensive amended report of the city engineer was read with reference to the difference in cost of building the sewers through the alleys and through the streets, the engineer estimating it would cost over five thousand dollars more to lay the pipes in the alleys. The mayor recommended the appointment of a special committee to give personal attention to the sewers and to report at every regular meeting. The recommendation was adopted and Councilmen Reed, Miller and Schorn were appointed on said committee.

Warrants to the amount of $1767 were ordered paid. The amount included $900 semi-annual interest on the funding bonds. The city engineer was notified that he would be required to give a bond of $5000 for the faithful performance of his duties in looking after the fulfillment of the sewerage contract, in accordance with plans and specifications.

The next regular meeting, Dec. 21st, will be the last of the year when full reports of all officers will be required.

The following is the report of the city clerk which the council ordered printed in THE HERALD:

GENTLEMEN: I beg leave to report having this day turned over to the city treasurer of this city, the "duplicate assessment roll" for the year 1891, with the necessary certificates and the mandate to said city treasurer as required by law. Said duplicate roll shows the following figures:

Amount of property on assessment roll as equalized after deducting legal exemptions, $1,603,368, @ 8 mills, $12,827.19; levy of city council total for all purposes 8 mills which segregated shows the following figures: For general municipal purposes 4 mills, $6,413.59; road and bridge purposes, 1 mill, $1,603.40; special water light and interest fund 3 mills, $4,810.20; total, $12,827.19.

Respectfully submitted, GEO. W. RODMAN, City Clerk.

A MAN WITH UNLIMITED FAITH.

Fred R. Reed Writes on His Favorite Topic—Yakima—and Thinks "Prosperity" is Stamped on Our Mountains and Valleys in Big Letters.

NORTH YAKIMA, Dec. 7, 1891.

When you invite your friends to a feast, you usually prepare and get ready by the time they arrive, so that what you have to offer is at hand. This applies directly to the Yakima country. Until you have water on your land, and are in shape to invite people here, what would you do with them? I hear men growl every day because immigration does not pour in here. I would ask those men where in the past would they have put these people? They cannot answer that question, nor can anyone. There has been, compared to the area of country tributary to North Yakima, but a very small percentage of it under cultivation, or that could be successfully cultivated, because it was not irrigated, and, without irrigation, barren. And now what has happened? Right here in our midst a great transformation has taken place—a general revolution of things. The great-est compliment the Yakima country ever received has been paid within the past twelve months, and that is that great corporations have expended vast sums of money in building canals to carry water to reclaim hundreds of thousands of acres of otherwise worthless land in order to give it a cash value and make every twenty acres a home, that a living can be made from and a family supported and money laid by for a rainy day. Our local people could not build these canals, because they had no money; but outsiders—strangers—have realized the future for Yakima, and of the many alluring inducements offered all over the northwest, have selected this country as the best place in which to invest their money. Point out any county in the state that has made any greater progress in a year. And now what is to be done? The table is set, the feast is ready, and the guests are coming; and who has sent and is sending the invitations? Why these companies who have made our country and done for us what we, with our local pride and unswerving faith, were unable to do. They will continue to send invitations to this feast to the people of every section of every state in the union, and to help matters along they will send their brightest representatives to show the invited people the way to Yakima county, and we who are here, with all the opportunity to get to the table first, if we don't do ourselves justice, whose fault is it? I see for Yakima county a bright and glowing future. I see for every man in his particular walk of life success if he works and saves and attends to business. I do not believe all our people realize what a favored section they live in. I sometimes get weary of hustling; but when I travel over the country and compare it with Yakima, I always feel glad that I selected this place for my home. I believe in this section, and I promise every reader of this article that every statement I have made will pan out as stated; and when I hear people say hard things of Yakima, I think that they are like the judge who asked Pat, "Are you guilty or not guilty?" "I can't tell, your honor," replied Pat, "until I hear the evidence." And it's the duty of every citizen to give enquiring people the evidence, that Yakima is the best agricultural county in Washington, which is an easy task. I see no reason for us to feel blue over the present situation. With these irrigation companies' work come people, money and prosperity. Yakima's progress from now on will be as rapid as money, muscle and brains can push it. Prosperity in big letters is stamped on our mountains and in our valleys; and it now remains for us to take advantage of Yakima's development. FRED R. REED.

Respectfully submitted, GEO. W. RODMAN, City Clerk.

—The business at the land office on Saturday, Dec. 5, was the largest of any day for months past. The cash receipts were $680.50, one application was made to make final proof, one contest filed and four patents delivered. Sidney Arnold made homestead entry No. 1737, in sec. 20, twp. 14, range 18; George C. —There is an eruption existing between Hyman Harris and J. L. Rosenfeld. When a customer would come to one and want goods not in stock he would run across the street and procure the same from his neighbor. This has been going on for some time, and now Rosenfeld wants a settlement, claiming $48 balance, while Harris admits of but $30. No settlement could be effected, so the matter was carried before Justice Henton. Fred Parker appeared for Rosenfeld and H. J. Saily for Harris. The question of jurisdiction of the justice was brought up, for while the amount claimed is less than $100, the accounts have never been balanced and run up into the hundreds. The law points will be argued to-day.

—The Herald is glad to announce that active work of excavation for the sewers will begin next week. Mr. Stewart, the superintendent, says the force will not be very large until the days begin to lengthen, when all the men it is possible to secure will be put on. In the meantime from twenty-five men will be put to work and preference given to residents and married men. Mr. Schmidt, the contractor, is expected over from Seattle in a day or two to make final arrangements for the inauguration of the work.

—Charles Miller was on Tuesday elected mayor of Roslyn over Walter S. Lytle by ten votes. There were 327 votes polled. Lytle is the supply agent of the coal company and the race was close because there is a feeling that there has been mismanagement and the city funds dissipated in some way. During the past year of its corporate existence Roslyn has collected about $17,000 in the way of taxes, licenses and fines and yet the treasury is without funds and there is a small debt on hand.

—Real estate is daily growing more active, and by early spring it is predicted that there will be a strong movement not only in farm but city property. Among recent sales are the following reported by A. L. Fix & Co.: H. F. Martin to Henry Waleh, 8 acres one mile south of North Yakima, $800; J. R. Filkins to C. Hesse, ranch of 156 1/2 acres on the Abnatum, $7,000; J. H. Hogobone to J. F. Jones, 100 acres on the Glade in Klickitat county, $4,000.

—The Rainbow fair was one of the most successful entertainments ever given in Yakima, and the ladies who aided in bringing it to its prosperous termination have much to congratulate themselves over. They worked hard, enthusiastically and to good effect. The display of fancy articles and Christmas goods was very fetching, the home-made candies delicious, and the dinners all that could be desired. The receipts amounted to over $350.

—The most gigantic liar on record has been heard from. He claims that the cause of his removal from Idaho was on account of the burning of his barn, in which was stored 1000 bushels of popcorn. When the fire got fairly started the corn began to pop and covered a fence field; one of his old mares that was nearly blind saw the corn, and thinking it was snow laid down and froze to death.

—Notwithstanding the recent briskness of the matrimonial market, the unity of all loving souls has not been fully consummated. Within a short time a well known Abnatum farmer will take to himself a bride, and soon after the new year a young lady resident of the bench will be joined in marriage to a prominent and wealthy stockman.

—The Schanno estate, consisting of the family residence and about seventy acres of land in Yakima City, has been bonded to Captain J. H. Thomas for $6,000. The bond extended over a period of six weeks, and about half of the term has expired. It is reported on good authority that Captain Thomas will consummate the deal.

—The government is getting liberal. It has finally decided to retain Fred Miller in service until the 1st of January, and has allowed half of the requisition made by Receiver Hare for new office furniture. There will be one stove instead of the two that are needed.

THE WORK GOES RIGHT ALONG. No cessation in the construction of the Big Canal—Eight Additional Miles to be Built This Winter.

THE HERALD last week published the statement that work on the big ditch of the N. P. Yakima & Kittitas Irrigation company would be suspended for the winter. The publication was made on the statement of Contractor J. L. Smith, who was preparing to withdraw his force and pay off his men. Messrs Katz & Smith had been unable to get instructions to proceed with the work beyond the seventeen miles of canal then completed, and were making arrangements to close down when the glad tidings were received from headquarters authorizing the continuation of the work through the winter, and the completion of the 25 mile contract.

Katz & Smith had a fine force of men at work and they were reluctant to suspend operations so the news was as gratifying to them as it was to all of our citizens who have been greatly benefited through the large amounts of money expended here by the contractors and the laborers.

Chief Engineer C. R. Rockwood when seen by THE HERALD representative stated that the present strength of employed men would be continued, and that it would consume all of the time up to the first of March to complete the eight miles of contract remaining unfinished. As to the work after that nothing definite is known, but it is the present intention of the company to keep right along with the construction until the entire system is finished. Water will not be turned into the canal until March as there will be no need for it before that time, and there will be less danger of breakage to the embankments when cured by winter's setting.

The company is disposing of much land along the line of the ditch and even beyond that portion at present contracted, which in itself is the strongest guarantee that there will be no cessation of work, as the contracts provide that the land shall be watered. E. F. Benson, who handles the company's lands, was in the city early this week and while in conversation with a HERALD reporter, in the office of this paper, said that in the neighborhood of ten thousand acres had been disposed of. The sales were mostly of twenty and forty acre tracts and had been made largely to practical farmers and horticulturalists who would begin the work of improvement with the opening of spring. Many railroad men have also made purchases, they looking upon the investment in the same light as they do a life insurance policy on the tonnage principle. Among the recent purchases of 40 acre tracts have been Frank Cardin, general superintendent of the N. P. Elevator Co., and John T. Bibbs, an officer of the Northern Pacific. Both of these gentlemen have made contracts for the improvement of their holdings and intend to make this their home.

THE CIRCLE OF CACHETTE

By ROBERT G. V. LAYERS

(Copyright, 1911, by American Press Association.)

"Are you well, Cachette?"

Mlle. de Boncourt was in a considerable quandary. And she had never been in such a thing as a quandary till she became enthralled over some Americans in Paris, their delightful chic, their ravishing sang froid, their piquant extensions of her conveniences. She at that time told the complete, her brother, that she feared the ancient regime had become passé, while she was confident that she belonged to New France under certain conditions, to the New World under any circumstances. Of course this greatly shocked the complete, and his friends to a man blamed him for having permitted Natalie so much latitude of association with the American ladies and their peculiar ideas of the eternal fitness of things.

When Natalie met a Vassar girl, in a costume by Felix, who told her that she worked for her living, the die was cast. Natalie was poor herself, the little diamonds bequeathed her by her granddame representing all the wealth she possessed and the complete's unique speculations on the Bourse made even those tentative at times.

She determined to emulate the Vassar girl, wear toilets by Felix, and earn her own living. She knew she dare not approach the complete with this determination, so she watched some American girls to find out the most effective way to cut loose from old, if picturesque, associations.

When one lovely young thing, with eyes the color of heaven and cheeks like tender young rose leaves, told her she had traveled around the world "all by herself" and not a shadow of harm had happened to her, Natalie watched her chance and went to Tiffany's to sell her granddame's quasi-historic diamonds. She was told that the stones were only large enough to be used in collar buttons, and was referred to a dealer with a generous type of nose, who offered her what seemed to her to be a ridiculously small sum of money for the jewels. But the Vassar girl worked for her living, and here was money sufficient to carry Natalie to New York and something over; besides, the jeweler with whom she dealt had a letter to her brother that caused him to tear his hair and expunge her name from the family register and become the laughing stock of the Bourse for a bad quarter of an hour, and Natalie sailed for America and freedom, carrying a handsome and a cage, in which fluttered her pet canary.

I believe there was something else that actuated her in this stage of her mad career, and that was that she had heard her mother had intended to arrange a marriage between her and the old Marquis d'Epineville, whose name she had heard with a woman's dread when she walked, who wore horribly large white artificial teeth, who drank the delectable green absinthe openly on the boulevard and called Natalie "ma femme."

At any rate, Natalie sailed for the states, and landing in New York went to a beautiful hotel that she had heard her brother had intended to arrange a marriage between her and the old Marquis d'Epineville, whose name she had heard with a woman's dread when she walked, who wore horribly large white artificial teeth, who drank the delectable green absinthe openly on the boulevard and called Natalie "ma femme."

At any rate, Natalie sailed for the states, and landing in New York went to a beautiful hotel that she had heard her brother had intended to arrange a marriage between her and the old Marquis d'Epineville, whose name she had heard with a woman's dread when she walked, who wore horribly large white artificial teeth, who drank the delectable green absinthe openly on the boulevard and called Natalie "ma femme."

Natalie first of all moved from the beautiful hotel and established herself in a charming flat with a professional chaperone old enough to be anybody's mother and plain enough to be the syndicate stepmother of all the virtuous. Now Natalie defied criticism and made her effort toward making her way. She could not go back to Paris, that was certain, and she did not intend to let America "go back on her," as a young man said, the Vassar girl's brother, who met her and admired her, but told his sister she'd better be a little careful, you know.

Natalie could embroider ravishingly; she had learned how to do it from the patient sisters in the convent where she had been educated. She embroidered now. It is not altogether an everyday event to have the sister of a count embroidering your table covers and putting your initials upon your linen, so the orders came in with considerable merit and the pay was generous—you might hardly call it a salary or a count, a might-have-been marquis, the beggarly sum you might give to some poor soul in a garret.

So Natalie became more and more Americanized, and said "Chestnuts" to some of the stories of former magnificence told her autobiographically by her companion. She considered herself happy for the first time in her life. Of course there were moments when she suffered a little from mal de pays, when the lilies of France meant something to her after all, and she thought of mamma and papa in Paris in the Chaise with the bead wreaths upon their tomb.

Not that she would look on at such times to Cachette, her canary, which she had brought away with her from Paris, and say:

"Est-ce bien vous (Are you well), Cachette?" and Cachette would twitter down to her wicker American way and sing for flies and say there were none on him. But after a few months patronage fell off—you cannot encourage even a count's sister, a might-have-been marquis—beyond precedent. And just then there came to town the wife of an English baronet who was known to have inspired a tender passion in the breast of a prince, and might have become a princess only that the unwritten law of royalty forbade it. Then began that awful quandary of the rent. This quandary lasted several weeks.

II

She wanted so many unconscious sittings

Natalie wondered if she would have to take a cheaper flat, go gradually down and down till she finally landed in the papers and with so much horror. But the cheaper flat came nearer and nearer every day till at last it could no longer be kept off. The companion made room for a lower priced article in the way of a half sized maid who could scorch a chop and ruin eggs in the most acceptable fashion.

Still the greatest quandary of all was not yet.

That was next to it when Natalie had not the rent for this cheaper flat, the Vassar girl passed her on the street as one suddenly struck with blindness, and she counted as a living creature, in so much as she existed for the sole purpose of spoiling whatever she undertook and warbling popular melodies to the accompaniment of piano organs that stopped at intervals.

Natalie grew wild of gaze and took walks on the Brooklyn bridge and looked at the water with speculation in her eyes. And those eyes were remarkably fine ones, too, and consoled well with the clear white complexion and even teeth and a charming figure that came as the inalienable heritage of a long line of cultivated ancestors.

Then it came about that Natalie was merely "the French girl," and the flat was a less expensive one still and more heavenward, and "the girl" faded from the perspective, and money was a scarce article indeed, and the shopkeeper said that really he did not want hand embroideries any more—they had gone out, don't you see, and pastermentier had taken their place.

It is possible that Natalie's Americanized ideas had undergone considerable moderation by the time, and at night when she could not sleep for wondering how she would get through tomorrow maybe her thoughts flitted over to Paris and the gay light streets and the theaters, the bright boulevards and the antiquated but kindly friendships she had once enjoyed—from all of which she was separated by more than time and distance.

"Oh, Cachette!" she would cry up to her inseparable companion with his head under his wing, "nous sommes étroitement unis!" (We are very closely united!) she could not pay the rent for even her poor flat, her own was very shabby, and the pot au feu was neither very succulent nor nutritious—and all this in a year!

The only work she had was a kerchief for Mrs. E. Platt Clayton, and she cried so much that she could hardly see to do it and made a false stitch here and there. In Paris she had met Mrs. E. Platt Clayton at a reception—of which more anon—and the lady held to her yet. "Though it may seem as if I were confessed just here that Mrs. E. Platt Clayton had ulterior views regarding her friendliness, and her sisters and sisters-in-law were beginning to complain: for Mrs. E. Platt Clayton had sent them so many useless embroideries that they spoke among themselves, and mutually owned that Amelia had always been a little odd and that maybe it had gone to her head. Still, eccentricity was a fact in these times, look at the English! The truth is that Mrs. E. Platt Clayton was an artist. She had been in Dresden and the little town of Sevrres, and believed the affluence had come to her and that she was a poet in rhins. And Natalie struck her from the list of being an ideal subject for illustration.

Since foreigners are prone to attribute our adoption of the chaperone to the moral decline of American manhood, may not the latter be justified in attributing it to the moral laxity of modern femininity? Viewed in any light, the chaperone as an American institution is not without honor. Happily it can never find root beyond the "Four Hundred," without which no city is now complete. It will ever be powerless to encroach upon our working women, who, from the intellectual to the manual, know that so long as they respect themselves and mind their own business they are likely to go to the ends of the earth unmolested.

She worked up to Natalie before she made a direct attack on her. Then she ordered a gorgeous altar cloth, to have put which into the church would have raised a schism. When she ordered that cloth she took off Natalie's head—sneezed it, you know. When the cloth was finished and she made it into an Afghan for her sister Margaret's baby coach, she had stolen Natalie's arms, her hands, her hair, one eye—indeed, she might have opened a museum of comparative anatomy in a little while. And all because she designed a coup, no less than an exquisite plaque with Natalie upon it, in the style of Watteau and Poisson, the subject, "Ariadne Deserted by Perseus."

No wonder she ordered so many embroideries, she wanted so many unconscious sittings from the girl, and a model she always best thought she, when she does not know and is posing.

She had Natalie come to her house before the girl's clothes were at their shabbiest, and John Abington, Mrs. Clayton's brother, saw the little thing and laughed long and heartily, and went to Margaret and the rest and told them Amelia's secret, and so saved the family traditions for sanity.

"And what a beauty the girl is!" thought John Abington. "A Dresden shepherdess, indeed. I never thought Amelia had good taste before." The plaque went on and so did Natalie's healthy young appetite and her power for wearing out clothing, until at last the kerchief was all the work she had, and the plaques was nearly finished

But, then, this was the climax, and, as everybody knows, after a climax things can only be worse or better, never as they were before.

Natalie picked up the kerchief one day and set about working a daisy in it. All at once a diamond drop of dew lay in the heart of the daisy—a tear.

The sun touched the dewdrop and flashed up to Cachette's cage, and the bird began to shriek—to sing heavenly, Natalie would have said. Whereupon it jumped Natalie, a second dewdrop on her lily cheek.

"Quel est le prix du loyer?" she said. (What is the rent?) I will soften the heart of my landlord, who admired Cachette only yesterday!"

For the owner of the flat had paid a domiciliary visit to his tenants the day before, and had snapped his finger at the bird for making so much noise, called Natalie "Miss Bunker" and had afterward given the agent a piece of his mind for renting an apartment to a lone girl and letting her get in arrears for rent at all.

"My other tenants are ladies and gentlemen," he said, "and I won't have it. Bounce her next week."

But how was Natalie to know anything of this?

"Ce pauvre Cachette!" (poor Cachette), she said, "I will soften the heart of my landlord, who admired Cachette only yesterday!"

Cachette put his head to one side and poured out a flood of melody. Natalie took him from his cage and held him up to her cheek.

"Adieu, Cachette!" she said. "Thou art all that is left. But the landlord must be softened—did he not admire thy song yesterday? He may give me time in which to pay my rent."

She plucked a long single feather from the wing of the bird and dropped it into her basket among the flosses and silver threads with which she was embroidering her dresses.

Still wavering, loth to let it go, she kept the little feathered thing in her hand off and on till evening.

Then with a great wrench and a throb in her throat she finally decided.

She put Cachette into his cage, threw on her hat, and cage in hand went forth to the brown stone apogee of Mr. Chamberlaine Brown, her landlord.

And now let Melpomene take her nap. (CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

DO GIRLS NEED CHAPERONES?

The Ultra-Fashionable Set Says "Yes." Others Say "No."

"Mamma cried the first time I went to the street alone," said a bright young Italian girl who after seven years of American life is about to return to her native Florence, into whose streets she may never venture alone. "It shocked mamma's traditional idea of womanly modesty and propriety, you know. But really," she added apologetically, "chaperones are necessary on the continent. The men are so bad. But they must be getting wick in America," she continued with a sudden sub-rosa in her melodious voice, "or it wouldn't be so fashionable to be chaperoned, would it?"

Can the Italian girl's selective solution of fashionable American's adoption of the chaperone be the universal construction put upon the transplantation of this Latin institution? Are American men falling from their high estate? With due respect to American manhood, much exaggerated sentimentality has and continues to be wasted at home and abroad on their petted chivalry toward women. Granted certain conditions, they differ but slightly from the masculine biped of other climes. An inch given, the American knight is as liable to take a square yard as his continental brother.

Will the chaperone as an American institution check or augment this elasticity? Tradition lends to the continental chaperone a certain awe that commands and receives respect. The American exotic has its tradition to make. The natural, free, untrammelled relationship of the sexes in our country—a relationship that rarely fails to invite the incredulity of foreigners, especially women, who, while they admire, have no desire to imitate their American sisters—in the direct and inevitable outgrowth of the early conditions of our civilization. There was no sex in the "hewers of wood and carriers of water" who trudged over the mountains and through the dense forests of America, laying the cornerstone of the republic. Our pioneer man and woman are the only tradition toward which the chaperone as an American institution may look for substance. Reared to believe all womankind capable to sustain and defend herself, the masses of American manhood give to her the respect, the confidence which insures it. The chaperoned American girl, therefore, is a reflection upon her countryman's traditional honor, a prick at his amour propre which finds natural retaliation in the suspicion that the chaperoned is not compe it faut.

Since foreigners are prone to attribute our adoption of the chaperone to the moral decline of American manhood, may not the latter be justified in attributing it to the moral laxity of modern femininity? Viewed in any light, the chaperone as an American institution is not without honor. Happily it can never find root beyond the "Four Hundred," without which no city is now complete. It will ever be powerless to encroach upon our working women, who, from the intellectual to the manual, know that so long as they respect themselves and mind their own business they are likely to go to the ends of the earth unmolested.

As Ancient Underground Town.

The Russian newspapers are reporting a singular discovery in central Asia. They say that in Russian Turkistan, on the right bank of the Amou Daria, in some rocky hills near the Bokharan town of Karki, a number of large caves have been explored which were found to lead to an underground town built apparently before the Christian era. Effigies and inscriptions have been found, and also designs upon gold and silver money, which lead to the belief that the town dates back to some two centuries before the birth of Christ. There are a number of streets and squares surrounded by houses two and three stories high. Urns, vases, cooking pots, and other utensils have been found in great abundance. The symmetry of the streets and squares, and the beauty of the baked clay and metal utensils, attest the fact that the people had reached an advanced stage of civilization. It is supposed the town was concealed in the earth to give the population a refuge from the incursions of savages and robbers.
