

The Arts and Crafts Movement

in the Pacific Northwest

with author Lawrence Kreisman

Driven by the need to simplify our lives and surroundings after the Victorian era, a design celebration of grace, simplicity and comfort was born in the Arts and Crafts movement. From homes to jewelry, this influence is found in objects both public and private. Local artisans in the Pacific Northwest contributed to this rich heritage making furniture, stained glass, jewelry, and homes. Bungalow, Craftsman, and Mission style homes are found throughout the Pacific Northwest.

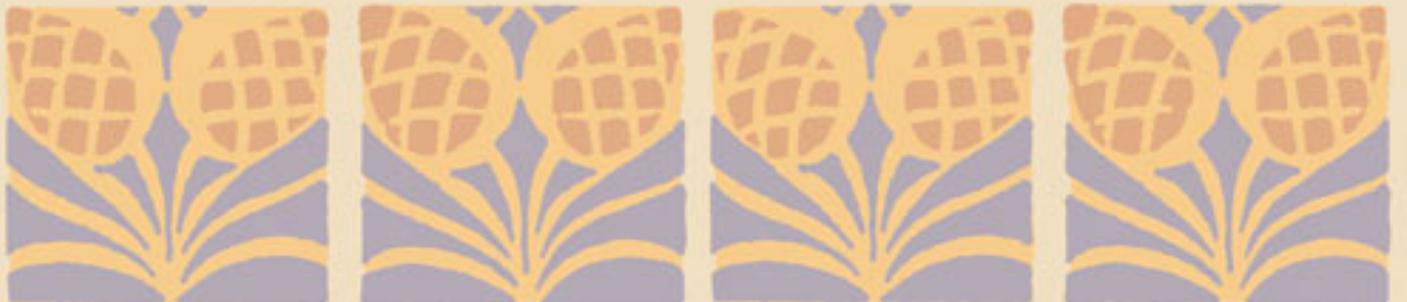

Since 1997 Lawrence Kreisman has been program director of Historic Seattle, a 32-year-old organization devoted to the preservation of buildings and sites important in Seattle's history. He is the author of numerous books on regional architecture. His latest book, which he co-authored with Glenn Mason, "The Arts and Crafts Movement in the Pacific Northwest," follows this movement in Washington and Oregon during the first quarter of the twentieth century.

Please join us as Lawrence shares the rich history of the Arts and Crafts movement in Washington State.
