About the Redistricting Commission
Every 10 years, following the decennial census, the Washington State Legislative & Congressional Districts are reapportioned. The state is divided into legislative and congressional districts. Each has a population of approximately 153,251 Washingtonians and elects to the Washington State Legislature 2 Representatives for the House for a four-year term.

How to Find Your District
Visit our website to find your district or use the Washington State Legislative District Map to determine your district based on your county, city, or zip code. For additional information about any of the data or demographics included in this map, please contact your county auditor or vocational disability application.

Learn About Your Districts
How does the commission decide how many people are in each district?
The number of residents in each district is proportional to the state population. Each district has a population of approximately 153,251 Washingtonians, and the number of districts is static. The Commission also utilizes the Federal Voting Rights Act to ensure that minority communities are represented.

10 Congressional Districts
49 Legislative Districts
7,705,281

2020 Population

Our State Leadership
Washington State is divided into 49 Legislative Districts and elects to the Washington State Legislature 2 Representatives for the House for a four-year term.

Our Federal Leadership
Washington State is entitled to 10 Congressional Districts and elects to the U.S. Congress 1 Representative for a two-year term.